The Conditions of the task two days have been remarkably good at the hour set for the race, and the indications are that they will be repeated today. In the drawing for positions yesterday afternoon Cornell had her usual good inch, and drew the outside course. where the ebb tide flows strongest. This is the third consecutive time that Cornell has drawn the outside position folumbia drew the shore and Pennsyl vania draw the sandwich, or middle place. It is asserted, and with some degree of truth, that the position that Cornell has held in the last two races, and will hold this evening, gives her considerable advantage over the other crews, the tide assisting her. In a small measure to overcome this advantage, the stakeboats were moved further out in the stream Wednesday. and may be today if the length of the

The officials of today's contest are: Referes, Harris R. Reynolds, of Pough-keepste. Mapes, Judges at the finish: Cornell, F. G. Schofield; Pennsylvania, Charles S. Potts, M. D.; Columbia. Harold H. Oddie. The crews of Columbia, Pennsylvania and Cornell are all rowing very fast. Perhaps the most notable improvement has been made at Columbia, where the disheartening experience of last year had made it almost impos-sible to get up onthusiasm. There is plenty of it there now, and Mr. Cowles' remarkable work has had great effect Pennsylvania is rowing the fastest looking boat on the river and the longest stroke. Columbia is rowing the fastest stroke, and Cornell the neatest, prettiest and slowest.

There has been lengthy discussions in the newspapers over the principle of the strokes used by each of the crews, and the experts here have attempted to give descriptions of the strokes. Last night the three coaches gave for the first time brief descriptions of their

Mr. Cowles' stroke, rowed by Colum-

"The forward reach is with straight arm and back, the back in a perfectly natural position. The catch is quick and is followed immediately by a hard, steady finish of the slide, the swing of the body going back a little beyond perpendicular, with hands finishing on the same level on which they were the beginning of the stroke. The recovery is a slight drop of the hands blade of water, then a quick shoot of the hands, followed by a slow forward movement of the body and the slides together until body and slides are in the same-position as at the beginning of the stroke. The length of the slide varies from 16 to 18 inches."

Mr. Ward's stroke, rowed by Pennsylvania:
"We are rowing the longest stroke on the river, averaging 34 and going to 36 on spurts of ten, then going back to 34. The men are reaching further than any other crew, although they do not move their bodies so much as the others, but use the full length of the slide, 22 inches. This can be seen by watching the angle of the cars, and not the bodies. The leg drive is also the greatest of all the crews here. The for-ward reach finds the legs well drawn up to the armpits, the back almost perpendicular and the arms at fur piled with all the energy possible. The blade slides out of water easily, and the recovery is almost instantaneous yet not checking the boat." Coach Courtney's Cornell stroke:

"A long reach forward, followed by a victous lunge with the blades that places them quickly, firmly into the water, before the application of the power, which begins instantly. The slide goes back under the straightening of the legs, and the body gradually assumes an upright position, then a backward tilt, the ellows bending from the straight arm at the commencement of the stroke until they are at the side at its conclusion. The shoulders through this movement are well set TRAINS FOR SHENANDOAH.
