Afterward, Mrs. Reineman suid, she went with De Requeseus to his printing place, he carrying the satchel. Mora, Hausman and several other men were there. I asked Mora-If he knew what was in the value, and he protended that he did not know. Mora accompanied De Requescus and myself to the Pennsylvania station. Then De Requeseus took the train for New Orleans. Mora carries the sat-chei to the station. The next day Mora insisted that I should follow De Reque-seus to New Orleans, and I did so, meeting De Requessus at the St. Charlies hotel in that city. I told him about the arrest of Jose Campo on the steamer at Port Limon, Costa Rica, and he exclaimed: 'My God, the government must have got the bill of lading for the sofa.' He referred to the sofa which contained the $500,000 worth of counterfeit Costa Rican bank notes. De Requeseus told me of the sofa and its contents when we were together in New Orleans and showed me the bill of lading. De Requeseus and Mora had a quarrel, and Mora said that De Requeseus had spolled tha game. He said that everything would have been all right if he had carried out his original plan and sent the money to Costa Rica in a plano. Mora was much put out, and said that the revolution was a failure. On May 10 he advised De Requessus and his foreman. Hausman, to leave the city, as he feared they would be arrested."

On cross examination she stated that De Requescus told her that he had made the counterfelt notes for Morn's political business, and that Mora would redeem them when he became president of Costa Rica, When she saw the money in the satchel she was surprised that the two men, who owed her a great deal of money, should have so many bank notes in their possession. She had been supporting De Requescus and Mora for a long time.
