COYLE'S DEFEAT.

What Our Exchanges Have to Say on the Subject.
The crushing defeat of Senator Coyle on Saturday is the subject of much comment, especially by the press of the county and state. The American is the only paper that pretends to see a future for its owner. Below we give a few cuttings from our exchange list:

There is something really pathetic in the wall of Senator Coyle over his defeat for re-election to the state convention, as published in the Mahanoy City American of Saturday. We are very certain that it would elicit for him more than the ordinary share of sympathy which is accorded to people in misfortune, if he would make a clear confession of the causes which contribute to it. It may be that these causes are not quite as obvious to Senator Coyle as they are to every other person in the county who has taken sufficient interest in public affairs to acquaint himself with his political career. People who are not only his political opponents are likely to discover in themselves the potent instrumentalities of their own undoing. Excessive vanity is a veil that blinds the possessor only to his own defects. It will be but a fair guess to say that Senator Coyle's story of the opposition of the Reading Company in his last fight for state delegate is not credited by any one. It was not necessary, even if there should have been any desire to engage opposition to his election. He was marked for defeat as soon as he went into the contest. He wanted a vindication and he got it.—Miner's Journal.

In the First District the old leader, and Brum's lieutenant, Senator Coyle, fell way outside the brackets. Coyle weighed in with Wyatt, the Quay Sergeant-at-Arms of the late Legislature. Coyle evidently forgot that the people had read about the doings of the Legislature; he reckoned on things ethereal, and to-day stands as a commander without a command, and an applicant for place without backing. It was a terrible fall for Coyle, but one which was expected. Under the circumstances there will be a big scramble to get under cover.—Pottsville Chronicle.

If the beaten candidate for state delegate had taken his defeat gracefully he would have left us entitled to the credit of having made a good fight, even if defeat closed the day, but his effort to end the convention in a fight and his miserable explanation of the causes of his defeat, deprive him even of the respect due to a good fighter. The true cause of his defeat was that he had attempted to play the role of the absolute boss, riding rough shod over all who opposed him, until he created a determined opposition which relegated him to the shades of political obscurity. Stop winning!—Mahanoy City Record.

The turning down of Coyle and Wyatt is regarded especially significant as it will have a bearing on Coyle's candidacy for a re-nomination to the Senate next year. Coyle is also known as the Senator who tried to get a bill for a hospital in Mahanoy City passed had existence only on paper. The Governor vetoed the bill.—Harrisburg Dispatch.

On the 10th the "Republican" dwelt at some length on the character and claims of Messrs. Bell and Strawn, and both were elected, downing one of the most tricky pair of politicians in the First District.—Senator Coyle and ex-representative Wyatt. While we have some regrets to express for others defeated, we are extremely happy that at least three of our leading candidates for the county were successful in the contest.—Republican.

The two Senators from Schuylkill county, Coyle and Loech, as well as the late Sergeant-at-Arms Wyatt, do not stand very high down there, and it is evident the record they made in the late session is not palatable to the people. All three of them were candidates for delegate to the forthcoming State Convention, and were beaten by overwhelming majorities. The odious character of the late Assembly will be the political death of more than one promising statesman.—Wilkesbarre News-Democrat.
