The Bellator. Its foremost of Antium fashion, with colorful illustrations, being authoritative. With this number of the magazine is begun a department of exceptional interest and value—a page devoted to Social Observances, in which Mrs. Mary Caldwell Jones brings the weight of unquestioned authority to the discussion of good form. Other serial features begin in this issue are Home Taxidermy for Women, by W. S. Edwards, and "Japanese Women," by Frances Stevenson. There are two capital short stories, "The Closed House"—No. 3, of "The Adventures of Olive Reardon," by Emma Wolf, and "The Joy of Life," No. 19, of Dr. Grace Peckham Murray's "Talks on Health and Beauty" relative to the various forms of bathing. The clever satire of Jennie Drake's "New York Types" is at its best in what she has to say of the untimely girl, Carolyn. Halstead tells how to Organize a Club. Mrs. A. B. Longstreet discusses upon Loyalty to Simple Standards in solving domestic problems; Mr. Vick's Flower Garden includes instructions for home-made greenhouses; and Mrs. Witherspoon's Tea-Table Gossip, Emma Hayward's Fancy Stitches and Embroidery, the recipes in "Seasonable Cookery," the notices of new books, the Children's Page, and the illustrated designs for Tatting, Crocheting, Lace-Making, etc., are all of accustomed excellence.

STRICKEN BABIES.

Underfed Ones Can Not Stand the Heat.

Many Sad Mothers Learn by Bitter Experience.

Wrong Cool at Bottom of Cholera Infantum.

Diarrhoea Should Never be Allowed to Run On.

Put the Child at Once on Diet of Lactated Food.

With cholera infantum, taking as it is East and West this summer, it is appalling to any one who understands the subject, to see the carelessness of parents and nurses in the matter of infant feeding.

It is not enough to merely select a pure nourishing food. It must be acceptable to the delicate, weakened stomach of the little one—high temperature makes it difficult for young children to digest only the most easily assimilable food without irritating their intestines into diarrhoea—food must be taken in sufficient quantities and with relish to keep the child strong, well and growing.

Lactated food is made with the express intention of forming a reliable infant food and a perfect substitute for healthy mother's milk.

An infant likes it, frolics, peevish babies grow strong, ruddy and healthy on it. It has the unusual virtue of inducing delicate babies to take an abundance of nourishment when other foods disagree with them, and when retarded growth, feebleness and intestinal irritation threaten the poorly-fed child.

Mothers and nurses who have used lactated food all agree that it best supplies the materials for baby's rapid growth and development. It is prepared with a regard to purity, cleanliness and freedom from any possible source of contagion that merits all the praise that has been so lavishly bestowed upon it by parents and physicians.

Lactated food has filled thousands of babies through the hot, sticky days. It should be in the hands of every parent.

The ill effects of the intense August heat are far-reaching. Many little ones droop and pine, without appetite and strength. Their usual diet fails to nourish, or more often is wholly rejected. In this weakened condition the mistake of overfeeding, that anxious parents too often fall into, instead of nourishing the little one, only brings on diarrhoea.

And diarrhoea, with the temperature high up, results in cholera infantum.

The most carefully, intelligently guarded children are those fed on lactated food. Babies, when weaning, do not throw it up. Picky ones show a decided and immediate gain. Their steady, healthy growth is due to this rich nutritive that is relished even in the hottest weather.

Lactated food brings sound sleep. It checks all wasting disorders during hot weather. Every year lactated food saves thousands of lives.

A baby's duty is to keep strong and well. The parents' duty is to give the infant the best food in the world—that is lactated food.

Died in Wales. There are probably few of the Welsh people of this section of Pennsylvania who did not know Rev. Frederick D. Evans, who died in Wales in July, and who was for many years a Baptist minister in Scranton and subsequently pastor of the Fourth Baptist church, Philadelphia. He was a most scholarly man and had been prominent in literary and musical circles among the Welsh people, frequently being called upon because of his great natural wit and ability to conduct Elateddods, and if we mistake not, appeared in that capacity in Shenandoah. He ranked high among the pulpit orators of his denomination and deservedly so, as his success in building up the membership of the several congregations he served testified. He was, probably, as well known by his pseudonym, Eddalyd, by his countrymen as by his proper name. Failing health compelled him to relinquish his ministerial duties and he returned to the land of his fathers in the hope that change of air might benefit him, but in this he was disappointed as death came instead and he died among his kindred in the home of his youth, after spending the greater part of his life in the United States with great credit to himself and benefit to his fellow men.

LECTURED BY HIS BRIDE.

The Deacon's Wife Told Him to Emphatically Turn What to Expect.

Old Deacon Stubbs rested his elbows on the rail fence and watched the wreaths of smoke that arose from his across pipe. But he shyly raised his eyes every few moments and glanced fondly at a plump little woman who was busily engaged in picking potato bugs from the rows of vines on the other side of the pallings.

He finally removed the pipe from his mouth and in a drawing but earnest tone remarked: "I say, widder, hain't today flat a year since your old man got the fever an' agur an' shook off his mortal coil?"

"Cum to think, deacon," the woman answered, as she made a grab for a good sized bug. "It do be a year to the day. An' a dreary year et hez bin, deacon."

"Jist so, widder," continued the deacon, lowering his voice. "Hev you bin lonesome like?"

"Hev the same, deacon."

"Hev you had a hankering to git spliced agin, widder?"

"They hez bin times, deacon, ex I would like to hev."

"I say, widder," interrupted the deacon, "hev you set your mind on anybody?"

"Me! La, no, deacon, or—that he—I hain't lowed anybody wanted Widder Stubbs."

"Ex—I—say, widder, they is one what would be willin'."

"Who hez the deacon?" the widow asked with animation.

"Waal, ther's ole Felix Foster an' Farmer Dudley an' thar's—but I say, widder, I low I know of one what 'ud be puffed by willin'."

"Who hez he, deacon?"

"Waal, I low 'tain't ettiquety for an ole widder like me to be playin' at courtin', but I thought he willin' to buck agin 'n life's river with Widder Simmons."

"La, me, deacon; I never 'spected' sich. Why, course I'm willin', deacon, of you air."

"I'm willin', jist right now, widder. Here comes 'nerson Gadley' 'cross the farm, an' you an' I'll git spliced in less'n two minutes."

"'nerson Gadley, after much surprise, asked the deacon and Widder Simmons to join hands over the fence, and in a short time the ceremony was over.

"Now, widder," said the deacon, after the parson had offered them a blessing, "ole right over the fence an' grab my arm. I want to take you home an' introduce you to my darter Carrylin'."

"I'm right willin'," the widow said, as she scrambled quickly over the fence, "but I low plum now, of your darter Carrylin' he is agin this pectidin, an' an ole he goin' to fit like two cats, an' if you take her part, deacon, I'm goin' to raise a lump on your head as big as the cowhouse yonder. Now, hearken to me, deacon; you wanted Widder Simmons, an' you've got to stan' around the do' jist as Widder Simmons sez, an' so does your darter Carrylin', of he sez sez 47 sumers an' got gray hairs."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
