The most abject terror prevails in Irlsk of being classed among the restored spollsmen in public life, that instead of the service having been strengthened and bettered, it has actually been weakened and emasculated by the idea that there shall be an indefinite tenure of office, and that public officials are, sooner or later, to become wards and pensioners of the government, thus establishing an office-holding aristocracy, after the manner of China, India, England and certain other monarchial govern-

This statement is acteristics of De Witt's Little Early Risers. one political party. One thousand three hundred and ninety-four Union soldiers were discharged, forced to resign, or reduced in the departments at Washington from 1893 to 1897, to make room for Democrats, scarce one of whom had seen service in the showed no marks of violence, but di Union army, while many of them had fought in the ranks of secession. In the mint at Philadelphia, during that time, over sixty Union soldiers were dismissed, thirty-two of whom received notice of discharge on Memorial Day, May 30, 1894.

Almost every bureau and department of the government is practically in the hands of the political party that was defeated at the polls last November, and as a consequence high officials hesitate, and even refuse to discuss with their subordinates matters of vital concern to the government, for the reason that they hold entirely different views from their chiefs, and in many cases are planning and plotting for a victory of the party to which they belong in Speaking of the absurdities in the civil service examinations, Senator Gallinger says they "have been such as to greatly weaken the law, and have been technical rather than practical, but it is now promised that they shall be more practical than heretofore. It is rather remarkable that twelve years should have passed without the necessity for this having been impressed upon the minds of the commission, and that now, when they and the system are under fire, For sale by your dealer.

the discovery should be made that a change is desirable. Some utterly absurd requirements have been made in the matter of examinations. As an illustration, the blank for the trades and skilled occupations requires, among other things, that the applicant shall hop on one foot, divested of all clouding, a distance of twelve feet. He is also required to pass an expensive medical examination, to give his height and weight, and to state whether or not he is immune from the characteristic diseases of the South."
