PASSING OF THE LEECH.

Medicine Has Turned the Cold Shoulder on an Old Friend That is Still Effective.

A young man with a black eye was led into a Brooklyn drug store in Fulton street the other night by some friends to see what could be done for his eye. The druggist said that he could not paint the eye, which the young man insisted was the only proper course, but a leech could be applied. There was some argument to the effect that leeches were old fashioned, but the young man consented to an operation. The druggist brought out a jar six inches in height and filled around inside with one hand. He brought out a crawling black object that he immediately transferred to a little pasteboard box, in one side of which he had cut a small hole, near the edge in the cover. Holding the hole up to the young man's eye, the druggist shook the box a little and the leech's head was soon a work reducing the size of the dark patch under the eye. Meanwhile the company got some instruction about leeches.

"The medicinal leech is not so much in demand as it ought to be," said the druggist, "and the main difficulty in this country is to get leeches that will not cause blood poisoning. The decrease in the use of leeches by the medical profession is remarkable. In England the largest five hospitals formerly called for about 50,000 of them; now they call for 50 or 100 leeches at irregular intervals. Owing to a lack of demand and overproduction in the old country, the price has fallen there to about one-half of that easily obtained 50 years ago. In this country a few places produce leeches, but they are not so good as those that are imported. The best are brought from Norway in tubs of rich lard. In England the speckled leech, which is ranked in Hungary for the English trade, is the most popular. The leech is used almost exclusively for removing blood from the eye after the bruise is a day old. When the eye is first bruised, the best thing to use is raw meat. The best leeches are those that hang on the longest. These are from Norway, and they are long and slender."

"I guess this came from Norway," said the sufferer, wincing. "It pulls hard enough."

"Oh, you will feel as lively as a cricket after this is over," said the druggist. "You needn't be afraid of any impurities, such as some have complained of when using American leeches. Some are raised in Florida, but they are not held to be very good. The danger of having leeches raised in warm countries is that the bite is dangerous, giving rise to blood poisoning. That's what is said of American leeches, but I never had any experience with them."

"How much?" said the man after the leech had let go.

"Twenty-five cents," said the druggist. —New York Sun.

Senator Wellington's Legal Victory. Baltimore, Aug. 21.—Judge Harlan, of the Baltimore supreme court, yesterday rendered a decision adverse to the plaintiff in the proceedings in which William T. Malster, a candidate for the Republican nomination for mayor of the city, seeks to enjoin the Republican city committee from passing upon the qualifications of delegates to the convention. Malster is known as the anti-machine candidate, his opponent being Theodore Marburg, formerly a member of the great tobacco manufacturing concern of that name. United States Senator Wellington has publicly declared his purpose to defeat Malster and nominate Marburg, and Malster asserts that the Republican committee means to use other means to unseat his delegates. The ground upon which the case was denied is that the court has no jurisdiction.

THE SMALLEST MEN.

CHARACTERISTICS AND ANTIQUITY OF AFRICAN PYGMIES.

They Are Probably the Aborigines of the Dark Continent—Du Chailin's Discovery in 1862— queer Features of the Obangos of West Africa.

The smallest race of mankind are the pygmies of Africa. They are probably, too, the oldest. They exist at the present time scattered throughout the forests of the Congo coast and thence northward beyond the equator, to the forest of central Africa—the terrible fighters that did so much damage to Stanley and the Emin expedition. They live hidden in the southern fastnesses of Abyssinia. They are the bushmen who skulk as wandering herdsmen in Graceland, Nampuland and Bechuanaland. They roam in the Kalahari desert. North of the Kalahari they dwell in the German possessions. Before the Dutch colonization in 1660 they possessed all the region from the Cape to the Zambesi river and beyond.

The antiquity of the pygmies is shown by the allusion to them in ancient monuments and in literary works. There is a figure of a pygmy on one of the earliest of ancient Egyptian monuments, dating probably as far back as 5,000 or 6,000 years. By his side is to be seen the inscription "Aka," the name as applied to one of the most numerous tribes of that race now existing in central Africa. An Egyptian inscription of 6,000 years ago records the fact that an exploring expedition that brought home a Denga dwarf, noted for his dancing.

Du Chailin's discovery in 1863 of pygmies in the region of the Ogowe river (west Africa) made a great stir in Europe when the story first came out. One hundred and forty miles south of the equator, and to the east of a southern tributary of the Ogowe, Du Chailin in June, 1863, suddenly struck in the savage forest on a village of wild dwarf negroes, called Obangos. The village, whence on the approach of Du Chailin's party all the inhabitants had fled, consisted of a cluster of extraordinary little huts, each of a low, oval shape, like that of a gypsy tent, about 4 feet wide, and the highest part about 4 feet from the ground. The huts were each made of the flexible branches of trees, arched over and fixed into the ground, the whole covered with large leaves. Inside these huts there were three or four sticks stuck across, and for the man and woman to sleep on, and in the middle of the earth floor smoldered the embers of a fire.

A little farther to the east Du Chailin came on another village of the little folk. Not to alarm them, he made for their settlement on the tip of a hill, and by the aid of three of his men and two guides. In a retired nook of the forest he counted 12 huts of the same slight make as in the case of those already described. Yet the village had caught the alarm and every household was on the move. Entering uninvited, Du Chailin found the abodes very filthy, and the intrusive visitors were stung out of the place by swarms of fleas. Another quarter of a mile through the forest they approached a third village, and again with the utmost caution, the Abangos were approached, and a bunch of beads before the eyes of the retreating Obangos. Their fears, though, were not to be allayed; they scampered off in a quaking hurry. But Du Chailin managed to surprise three old women and one young man. One of the old women, looking at Du Chailin, her hands gave them and plucking up heart of grace, fated the runaway men, saying they were as frightened as squirrels that cried "Quei quei" and while so speaking she twisted her body in such odd contortions as to make any traveler's party all laugh outright. When however, Du Chailin proceeded to unroll his tape in order to measure the bold show, her fears returned to her. The unwinding tape was a mysterious snake she had never before clasped eyes on, and she trembled all over. Still, by means of presents and threats, her nerves gradually calmed, and she at last let herself be measured—4 feet 4 1/2 inches. The young man stood 4 feet 8 inches.

In color the Obangos are of a dirty yellow, lighter than the Ashango negroes and whom they dwell; their eyes look reddish and unattractive. Their clothing consists of coarse, narrow, black bands, which they either buy or get from the Ashangos. Such rags, by way of cover to their nakedness, and a few bent sticks, by way of house, constitute their whole defense against the heavy rains and winds and storms of the coast.

So shy in their intercourse with other people, the Obangos are yet brave hunters, and very skillful in the use of the bow and poisoned arrows, as also in trapping wild animals and catching fish, the surplus of which, fresh or dried, they barter with their neighbors for plantains, iron implements, etc. The woods around their villages are planted thick with traps and pitfalls, in which they catch not only smaller game, but also elephants, pythons, gorillas, etc. Buried in the almost impenetrable forests between the Ogowe and the Kongo, the Obangos shift their camp whenever game begins to grow scarce. Knowing nothing of tillage or pasture, they are a people of purest gentry that from ages immemorial have never done a hand's turn of work, unless only in noble sport—London Globe.

POLITICAL POINTS. The selection of a county chairman, by the Republican nominee, must be made within ten days of the county convention, which expires on Thursday, next. It is more than likely that the chairmanship will come north of the mountains.

Congressman Brannan was in Ashland on Thursday evening, and had an interview with the several candidates for postmaster at that place. The appointment will be made soon. Those mentioned for the position are William Levy, R. B. Clayton and Lin Gardner. The present incumbents at Tremont and Port Carbon will also expire shortly and their successors named.

Shades of departed greatness in politics! Here is a Pottsville paper calling the late Bill Randall, the Democratic war horse and long state Senator, Sammy! Such is fame.

The Democratic headquarters on Monday were held in the Exchange building, in the same rooms they occupied last year. It is said M. E. Doyle, of town, will be substitute for Miles Brannan, of Mahanoy Plane, as delegate to the Democratic state convention. The latter is confined to the house through illness.

The value of the practical demonstration that price is not dependent on the quantity of money, but on the relation of supply and demand, is very great for plain people whose minds have been muddled by the confident assertions and thimble-rigging reasoning of silver leaders.

Dr. J. Higgins, candidate for Sheriff, will have headquarters at the Exchange Hotel, while M. J. Scanlan will be found Wolf's hostelry.

The local politicians are already considering the names of several prominent Republicans in connection with the Senatorial nomination next year. John J. Coyle, as a matter of fact, has put himself as a candidate.

Frank Kautner, of Lotts, has said to have aspirations in that connection. Among the local "statesmen" the name of ex-Councilman A. B. Lamb meets with much favor. He has the necessary qualifications, and would make a strong candidate. It is not known whether or not Mr. Lamb would accept the contest.

The Democrats have adopted the same rule as did their opponents, and no one will be allowed on the floor of the convention but delegates and reporters. The general public will occupy the galleries.

The contest for delegates in town this afternoon in the various wards was spirited. The sound money Democrats are talking very little interest in the Democratic county convention.
