POPULAR TRADITION.

A Missionary Who Was Sorry He Didn't Give It Credence.

There was once an energetle and strong minded missionary in the south seas who took a great deal of interest in the folklore of the island where he dwelt. After years of study he made up his mind for good and all that there was not a particle of fact in the legends professing to be his-toric which he had faboriously gathered. In distrust at his own credulity, unwilling to let people know what a fool he had tossed his whole collection into Some days afterward there was a terrific hurricano. The islanders had told him that once upon a time long ago a certain famous chieftain used to sit on a stone bench beneath a tree which grew close to the mission house. That bench had disappeared, no one knew when or how, but in the days of heathendom they used to place offerings to the spirit of the old chief near the spot where it had stood. When the missionary sailled out on the norning after the storm, the first object he noticed was this tree overthrown, and in the midst of its upturned roots hung a stone bench! The reverend gentleman-Whiting was his name, if we remember right-stood in a maze. The legend was true, then! Examination proved beyond a doubt that the bench had rested against the bale of the tree in some distant age, for there was no trace of an incluion. The for there was no trace of an incision. The wood had grown smoothly round and over it. So far as he could roughly compute, four centuries must have passed sincold stood outside the trunk. For that time the islanders had preserved the memory of a circumstance so trifling, for to question that this was the bench they assigned to their mythic here would have been silly.

of years because he would not credit the accounts of grave events given in all eerium a pleasaut call. Mr. Gable returned to Pittaburg this afternoon accompanied by his proved that they were trustworthy even on such a detail as the personal habits of a man who died 400 years ago!-London after spending her vacation at the parental Standard.

Early in the present century the chimneypot hat, as it is called in England, became the fashionable hat to the exclusion of others. It was evidently suited only for dress oceasions, but in England and in America it has been worn by business and professional men, often as a mark of the profession or an affectation of special dig nity. The American stovepipe or tile and the English chimneypot are neither comfortable nor convenient, yet they have sur-vived. Fashion is a stern diotator.-Sloux City Journal

Fire at Gilberton

A slight fire occurred in the kitchen of the rear of Frank Harding's residence at Gilberton yesterday morning. When it was dis-covered it had gained considerably headway, but was quickly extinguished by several neighbors who formed a hook and ladder company by toppling the structure and throwing water on it.
