AMUSEMENT NOTES.

"THE SPORTING CRAZE."

The 24th and latest edition of "The Sporting Craze" will be shown at Ferguson's theatre to-night by F. P. Jones' company of comedians. This farce has enjoyed the distinction of being one of the funniest and most enjoyable of any of its kind on the road. Everything is new and up-to-date, songs, dances, specialties and music, and wherever it has been presented is always enjoyed by the old as well as the young. There are no dull moments, but full of ludicrous situations which the plot evolves and makes one continue to laugh from beginning to end. No doubt it will and should be greeted by a packed house.

THE VERISCOPE.

The Veriscope pictures of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons gladiatorial fight will be seen at Ferguson's theatre next Thursday night, Sept. 28. These motion pictures have proven to be as instructive as well as entertaining and are a treat to all classes of people. While the pictures are said to be absolutely correct, omitting no part of the contest, yet detail, there is nothing about them to offend, and this fact has been demonstrated by the large number of ladies who attend the exhibition. The prices for the engagement will be within reach of all, 25, 35, and 50 cents.

TWO PRETTY PLAY WIPES.

Would Shenandoah support first-class attractions? Is the question often asked by local theatre-goers. This was demonstrated last evening when about seventy Shenandoahans attended the performance of "The Gladiator" at Henker's theatre, Mahanoy City. This is excluding those who witnessed the Cameron Clements opening performance at Kater's which was also an attraction of a great many from this town. The accommodations offered by the Mahanoy City theatres is a strong attraction in itself.

ERRORS OF AUTHORS.

Some Had Musical Breaks That Have Been Made by Writers.

In their allusions to the musical art our novelists commit the most amazing blunders with the most serene consciences, blunders of which any schoolboy would be ashamed, and from which no more serious than is necessary to turn over the leaves of a dictionary of music might have saved them. One novelist, for example, makes his hero a soprano. Another pictures a Scotch Highlander sitting on the roadside singing a Jacobite song and accompanying himself on the bagpipes. Mr. Marion Crawford has ascribed "La Favorita" to Verdi, a feat paralleled by Mr. Black in setting a lady down to a piano to play Liszt's "Pavane," a composition unknown to that musician's many admirers. Mr. Black has again distinguished himself by describing one of his heroes as playing an unheard-of and impossible sonata of Mozart in A sharp major. One of the early poets stigmatized the innocent souls of C major as lawless and banished it from the music of the church. One can understand Mr. Black's key of A sharp major being placed on the index expurgatorius of the musician, for the ten sharp which would be required to make up its signature would frighten a Diabolo among piano players. Even Charles Reade, who really did know something about music, at any rate about old violins, was on dangerous ground when he ventured on details of musical technique.

In "The Vagabond," for example, he makes his famous actress whistle a quick movement upon a huge paste ring and then tells how Mr. Ciber was confounded by "this sparkling adagio." No wonder Mr. Ciber was confounded. A quick movement which is at the same time an adagio is enough to confound anybody. Nor are Englemans the only offenders. Victor Hugo in "Les Miserables" has three violins and a flute playing some of Haydn's quartets at a wedding. The combination is curious enough in all sciences, and certainly Haydn never wrote for any such quartet of instruments. Aristotle held that the moral effect of a flute is bad and exciting. What it might be when combined with three violins we can only guess. —Macmillan's Magazine.

IT HURT HER DIGNITY.

The Elevator Man's Trick Offended the Falling Girl.

"You fellows have got your business down to quite an exact science," the flight instructor remarked, observing that the elevator had been stopped with its floor on an exact level with the floor of the hallway.
"Yes," the elevator man assented; "a person gets so used to this sort of thing that he doesn't notice it much. A well-timed piece of work was done in that next shaft the other day," he continued. "Probably nobody except me would have paid any attention to it, but it struck me as a very good illustration of the skill that can be developed in this profession."
"Yes!"
"Yes. It was this way: The twenty-second floor door of this shaft where the thing occurred had been left open and a stenographer girl gets absentminded and steps in. The car was then at the twelfth, coming up, and the door was open. The stenographer just as she starts. Here, this I never do," says he, and with that he reverses and starts his car down.
"The girl passes me at the seventeenth, and I follow everything open to keep along with her. When she gets to the eighteenth, she is going I judged she hit the roof of the car under her with an awful bump, but she didn't. The elevator man kept his eye on her and gauged the speed of his car so's to fall just a little bit slower than she did. She'd almost caught him at the seventh, but they were going like fun. If it hadn't been a pretty high building his calculations would have been upset of course. As it was, though, he had time to jolly her for a floor or two—kept just out of her reach, you know, so's to keep her guessing. When he saw she was getting pretty close to bottom, he pulled the lever over just the least bit, air, and she lights on the roof of that car just as easy as if she was sitting down on an easy chair. He stops with his roof flush with the second floor, and the stenographer opens the door and steps out. She'd never seen a man stop again, she vowed, because he'd jolted her that little bit on the way down. Funny how touchy these women are, ain't it?" —Chicago Times-Herald.

The Antiquity of the Glove.

The antiquity of gloves has long been in dispute. The question turns upon the rendering of a passage in the fourth chapter of the book of Ruth, verse 7, 8:
"Now this was the manner in former time in Israel concerning redeeming and exchanging: the buyer plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbor, and this was a testimony in Israel. Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee. So he drew off his shoe."
For shoe, in these verses, it is said we ought to read glove. On this matter Mr. Joseph, a Hebrew of great literary attainments and author of several learned works, advances the following theory: The Hebrew word signifies to shut close or to enclose. When followed by regl, the foot, it might mean a shoe or sandal, but when it stands by itself, as in the original of the passage quoted, it must be rendered "glove." It is further stated that the ancient and modern rabbins agree in rendering the word from the original as "glove," and that Joel Lez, a celebrated German translator, gave, instead of shoe, his native tongue native term of handschuh, hand shoe, by which gloves are known in Germany to this day. ("Gloves," by William Beck, 1882) —Notes and Queries.

Labouchere on Monarchy.

Monarchy in England will last my time, but even if the hereditary principle is maintained in regard to the throne of the state, the fust and feathers in connection with a court will probably have disappeared by the time those who come after us are discussing the events of the twentieth century. For all this it is every day becoming more and more of a harmony with modern thought. Those, however, who would have the institution continue in its present form in mediaevalism would do well to reverse the battle law and limit the succession to the throne to females, for they are far more fitted for the ornamental function of reigning without ruling than men. Their weakness is their strength, and they have tact.—London Truth.

Road Race.

Many people lined the course of the Port Carbon bicycle race, which took place yesterday afternoon, at 4:30 o'clock, and much interest was manifested in the result. The entries were Stork and Hatch, Pottsville; Hickey, Fitzpatrick and Harrison, Port Carbon; McGinty, Burch and East, Mahanoy City. The race was exciting from start to finish, when McGinty forged ahead and won easily, with half a mile to spare. The course was from Port Carbon to the railroad at New Philadelphia and return, a distance of 34 miles, and McGinty's time was 34 minutes. Hickey was second and Fitzpatrick third.

Japanese Paper and Varnish.

How many varieties of paper do you think they manufacture in Japan? Over 20 kinds are made from the fibers of various grasses and plants. "Paper," says Miss Bird in her interesting record of travel in Japan, "is used for walls, windows, cups, pocket handkerchiefs, lanterns, wrapping, cloths, hats and luggage covers and is used domestically and professionally for all purposes for which we use lime, bandages and cloths. It is so tenacious as to be nearly untearable, and even the finest kind, an exquisite and costly Japanese fabric, as the most delicate silk wrap, in which fine gold lacquer is usually wrapped, can only be torn with difficulty."
The same writer tells about the fine varnish or lacquer which we see on the beautiful Japanese trays and bowls. It is a natural varnish, the product of a tree, from which the sap is taken in the early spring. When it comes from the tree, it is of the color and thickness of cream, but it darkens when exposed to the air. Lacquer is used for all kinds of purposes, from the golden shrines in the temples to the rice bowls in which the humblest coolly takes his meal.

Pon Portrait of Sardon.

Edmond de Amlele, the Italian writer, visited Sardon in Paris and describes the visit in his "Nouvea Antologia." Of the old dramatist he says:
"He looked a little like Napoleon, a little like Voltaire and a little like the smiling portrait of a malicious actress which I had seen in a shop window the previous day. He wore a large black velvet cap, below which fell long, waving gray locks. He had a silk handkerchief round his neck and was wrapped in a wide, dark colored jacket, which looked like a demureless gown. My attention was riveted by his strange face, without beard and colorless, with a long nose and pointed chin and irregular and strongly marked features, lighted up by two keenly sparkling gray eyes, full of thought, the glances of which corresponded with the rapid motion of the thin and flexible lips, and the acute face, benevolent expression of the whole face, sometimes illumined by a bright, slightly mocking smile, like that of a quite young man. He did not look more than 70 years of age, and when he spoke he seemed still younger."

Writing to Oblige.

"I'd like to see a man like me!" she said, with considerable spirit.
"Well," he replied thoughtfully, "as a spectacle I think you would find it disappointing. The value of a kiss does not lie in the looks of it, you know. However, if you feel the way about it, suggest that you stand over here and look in the mirror. There! That's just it."
"You horrid thing!" she exclaimed just about half a minute later.

Afterward she confessed to her dearest friend that she was so preoccupied that even then she did not see any one like her, but she was pretty well convinced in her own mind that some one did. —Chicago Post.

MAHANAY CITY, Sept. 28.—John Danko, a laborer residing here, received painful injuries at noon to-day by falling from a trestle at the stock yards below town.
