MONEY BY REGISTERED MAIL.

Result of the Government Declining to Ship by Contract Rates.
A novel feature in the shipments of currency to interior points, and particularly to the South and West, by local banks this fall is the great extent to which the registered-mail service is being used for that purpose. Instead of the money being shipped by express as was formerly the general custom, the reason for this is the inability of the banks to secure this year, through the State treasury, the benefit of the government contract rates for the expressage. As a result of that the banks have had to pay what are known as bankers' rates to the express companies, which are two or three times as great as the government contract rates, or ship their money by registered mail.
Resolved the treasury gladly gave to the banks the privilege of shipping currency at the government contract rates, or rather, shipped the currency for the banks at the government rates in return for gold deposits. A plan, however, was inserted in the contract with the express company when it was made by which such percentages should only be added to the banks when the treasury needed gold. The decision in the matter apparently rests with the Secretary of the Treasury, and he has seemingly decided that the treasury does not want gold now. Consequently the banks cannot have the benefit of the government contract rates for expressage, although bankers generally seem to think it would be better for the treasury always to take gold when it can without loss. The treasury ruling, however, has not helped the express company very much, because nearly all the country banks to whom money is remitted, and who have to pay the cost of transmission, direct their New York correspondents to ship the money by registered mail, and insure its safe delivery in one or other of the companies which make a specialty of that business. If money is lost by an express company during transmission, the loss is promptly made good, whereas, bankers say, it takes a long time and is a troublesome business to cover the amount which the money is lost in the mail. The government is not responsible; it only promises to take greater care of a registered package. The cost of a large national bank which ships many thousands of dollars every day to its correspondents all over the United States, in speaking of this matter said:
"The conservative banker still prefers to send money by the well-known express companies, but, to save expense, since the government refuses to remit for the banks any longer at government contract rates, the country banks are apparently willing to take the risk of transmission by registered mail, which guarantees an insurance company's policy for its safe delivery. Notwithstanding, however, the registration and insurance, the risks of sending large sums of money by mail are very great. A package of currency which is forwarded by the registered mail department of the postal service has no distinctive mark indicating its value; a postal receipt is given for it just the same as for an ordinary letter or package of merchandise. The package of money is thrown in with packages of merchandise of all sorts, and no more care is taken of it than is taken with a box of shoes or a package of gloves. The registry clerk's receipt is not a document that is as well known or as satisfactory as the receipt of the receiving clerk of an express company, and in case of the loss of the package, the delay in the recovery of the money is interminable.
"For instance, a few years ago a southern bank ordered from its New York correspondent $20,000 in currency; the money to be sent by registered mail. The package was put, as supposed to have been put, in a certain through pouch; but when the pouch was opened in the southern post office in the presence of the president of the bank, who was anxious about the arrival of the money, the package was not there. Investigation by the post office authorities failed to discover any regular letter or package of merchandise which had issued a policy guaranteeing its safe delivery was no more successful, and it was a long time before the bank was reimbursed for the loss. The inconvenience caused to banks by the non-receipt of money on time could not be estimated. In some cases, as in that of public, for instance, the delay might be fraught with very serious consequences. A year or so after the loss of the money referred to, other similar articles were traced to a certain dishonest postal employee, and the secret of the missing money package was then solved by his confession.
"On the other hand, the express companies locate missing packages of money or merchandise lost promptly, without technicalities or delays. They are responsible, and their employees are chosen solely on the ground of ability and trustworthiness, and they are therefore more likely to be accurate and prompt than postal employees, who save their places more or less to politics, notwithstanding the strict service examination. While it is true that by insuring money sent by registered mail there is some guarantee against loss by non-delivery, it is equally true that there is considerable risk of loss if the insurance company stands on technicalities. The slightest informality in the absence of the terms of an open policy issued by the insurance company renders the policy invalid, and would in the case of a missing package cause the loss to fall on the consignor. The technicalities to be observed by a remitting bank in sending money by registered mail when the delivery of the money is insured by one of the local insurance companies are very great compared with the simple but safe methods of the express companies, and unless some new regulations are made by the postal authorities for sending money by registered mail conservative New York banks will certainly prefer to ship by express."
