A TALK ABOUT SLEEP

A DOCTOR OVERTHROWS AN OLD THEORY AND EXPOUNDS A NEW ONE.

Intellectual Activity as it Affects the Need of Sleep—Naps After Meals Are Declared Not to Be the Thing—Conditions When Nervous Cells Shut Up.

"But I can't sleep," insisted the patient. "That's nothing," replied the doctor. "Nothing," repeated the patient. "No, you don't," rejoined the doctor. "You stay awake part of the time and dream some more of the time that you're awake, and sometimes you sleep soundly."

"You're going too fast," said the doctor. "In the first place, how do you know that you need sleep any more than you do? Lots of people sleep too much for their own good."

"Some people," retorted the doctor, "come in here and say they've been awake for three square meals a day all their lives, and they don't know why they should have dyspepsia now. There are a lot of possible dangers about too much sleep in the way of causing certain ailments, to say nothing of the wear and tear of the nervous system about trying to force yourself to sleep more than your nature says, just because you've heard that the normal man spends a third of his life in bed."

"And a victim of insomnia," added the patient. "When you're growing old," continued the doctor, "you may know that your intellect is all right and your powers are unimpaired so long as you stay awake. It's only when you feel a constant need of sleep that the decay of the mental faculties has set in."

"Then maybe I'm growing young," said the patient. "I used to take a nap after dinner, and now I can't even do that."

"A good thing for you," said the doctor. "You oughtn't to sleep at all now."

"How about the famous siesta of Latin countries?"

"It's all wrong. If doctors wait long enough, a case is pretty sure to come along that will tell them what they want to know. It would, of course, be easier to cut people up and find out the things we want to know as the questions arise, but there are objections to doing that, and we have to wait until good fortune brings somebody in the right way. So I'll happen that once a man had his stomach cut open by the accident and his doctor

Prevent Pneumonia

Prevention is always better than cure, even when cure is possible. But so many times pneumonia is not cured that prevention becomes the natural act of that instinct of self-preservation which is "the first law of nature." Pneumonia can be prevented and is often cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"Some years ago I had a severe cold and was threatened with pneumonia. I could neither eat nor sleep, and was in a wretched condition. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and took it according to the directions, and at the end of fifteen days I was well and sound as before the attack. I have recommended it in many cases of pneumonia since, and have never known it to fail in effecting a cure."

JOHN HENRY, St. Joseph, La. "I was attacked with a cold that settled on my lungs, and defied the skill of my physicians. I had tried every remedy, but in vain. At last I began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and was entirely cured after having taken two bottles."

FRANCISCO A. SEVERIANO, Taunton, Mass. AJER'S Cherry Pectoral is put up in half-size bottles at half price—50 cents.

made use of him. The doctor learned a thing or two from this. The process of digestion becomes weaker while the man was asleep. The point is that it isn't well to sleep after meals. Some people feel the need of a nap after eating. That is to be commended. The digestive apparatus isn't good at night, and it's best to let it rest. In other cases food needed elsewhere is drawn to the stomach and the brain is impoverished. That's why some people and some other animals go to sleep after eating. They're not doing it for any reason. It's just the way they're made. I don't sleep now, but in my case I've had a lot of care on my mind."

"Maybe that's the reason why I can't sleep," replied the doctor. "Care works both ways. Toward the end of his career Napoleon sometimes could scarcely keep awake at crucial moments in the midst of a battle. They said it was his liver, but it wasn't. The same phenomenon was observed among the ancients. A passage was called to my attention only the other day from Montaigne's essay on sleep. He says that the emperor Nero, after having made all arrangements for killing himself, he was so overcome by drowsiness that he fell asleep and soon was snoring. In the same way, Caton, when about to commit suicide with himself, was overcome by sleep, and once the Emperor Augustus, when engaged in a naval battle, could hardly keep himself awake long enough to give orders."

"All that is very interesting," said the patient. "But what has all that to do with sleep?" "Everything in the world," answered the doctor. "If we only knew what sleep was, I might do something for you that would remedy the evil in a different manner. But unfortunately we don't. We're not even sure that we're any where near knowing it, but we think we are. Do you know what the latest theory of sleep is? Of course you don't. It's only about two years old, and it isn't yet in a condition for popular consumption. It is too complicated for me to explain to you. There are too many technicalities and provisional hypotheses and other involved things about it. But the general idea of it is simple enough. You know there are such things as nerve cells, don't you? Well, we used to suppose that they were continuous and formed a permanent line of communication for ideas to pass over. Now we find, or at least we think we find, that they are only contiguous, that they connect one with another by means of prolongations. Sometimes they contract and draw in their prolongations, and then they are as much shut off and isolated as a medieval baron used to be in his castle when he raised the drawbridge or as two cities are nowadays when a billiard comes along and blows down the telegraph wires. That is sleep. Sometimes a few of the nerve cells remain connected and exchange ideas. That is what dreams are. When you're awake, they're all connected, and as you go to sleep they contract and shut off the current. That's why, isn't it? Well, in your case, you're something wrong. The cells are either not contracting or they're contracting and keeping them excited. So the thing to do is to try to soothe them, and that's what I've been trying to do. Don't worry about going to sleep, and maybe in time the larkies will get calmed down and will contract and you can get all the sleep you're entitled to. Try soothing them. And I suppose you expect me to give you a prescription besides all this good advice and wisdom?"

"I believe it's a cautionary," said the patient. —New York Sun
