The Home Life.

The wisdom and unwisdom of self repression is carefully weighed by Mary E. Baldwin, in a paper on "Safety-valves in Home Life," where she contends that " a high-pressure life calls for protective measures, and the woman who engages mind and heart in her purpose, even though she may not be classed among public workers, instinctively seeks her safety-valves. These are peculiar to her individuality, and suit, as she imagines, her needs ; but sometimes they are not altogether chosen wisely, and often are overused.

"The intense nature with the greatest need for letting off steam is the one who will make the mistake in this direction. Action and re action will be equal with her. The home of such a woman is often a place where tragedy is frequently enacted. Her nervous system, wrought up to a point bordering Which purifies and upon frenzy, her mental and physical energies following its lead, there comes a moment when the strain must be relieved or mind and body will give way under the great weight. "It is not an easy thing to acquire the habit of withholding the worst from the dearest friend, and showing him only the best; but it is possible when the heart is right and the purpose has even a germ of strength. One brave, gentle woman, full of the fire that would have early consumed her but for her wise use of safety valves, confided to a friend her experience in trying to relieve the tension of mind and spirit without giving discomfort to those whom she loved. Her plano became her abid ing friend whenever she felt the need of letting herself down from a too highly strung condition. She played off her feeling and gradually found hersalf calmed and rested. And there were times when a favorite poet offered himself as guide into the realm of restfulness, and step by step led her on to the heights where she found repose.

"The woman with mental resources and with wise discrimination will learn to choose her safety-valves with reference to the comfort and peace of the home, and will thus find a gain in self-respect and in strength of will.

We are analous to do a little good in this world and can think of no pleasanter or better way to do it than by recommending One Minnte Cough Cure as a preventive of pneumonia, consumption and other serious lung troubles that follow neglected colds. C. H. Hagenbuch.
