Fire was discovered in the storeroom of the Philadelphia Cloak Company, on North Centre street, Pottsville, early yesterday morning, and the chemical engine soon ex-tinguished the flames with little damage after they were allowed to work. Many of the firemen were drank, and there was a fight between the several companies as to which had the right to the first stream. According 25 Cents to a rule of the department the chemical engine has the right of way and should have 25 Cents been put to work first, but two of the other companies were on the scene first and refused 25 Cents to give way for the chemical, and then the row started. The Chief Marshal's orders were ignored, and the police were called in to suppress the riot. Two or three of the firemen were placed in the lockup.
