Next Wednesday was decided upon port, not yet made public.

In anticipation of the invasion of Cuba in e coming week, the War Department is sending to Tampa large quantities of supplies to be used by the invading army. Stone buildings are now in the course of erection at Tampa, to be used for the cold storage of the army rations. It is understood that while the army is in Cuba the necessary supplies will be shipped daily from Tampa and carried directly to some sea port nearest to headquarters of the United States army. In this way the troops will receive fresh provisions every day, which will be a great factor in warding off sickness.

As outlined in these despatches to the Herald, the fast auxilliary cruisers will scour the sea for the appearance of the Spaniards, and when sighted will make for the nearest American port and give the alarm.

It is learned that Admiral Sampson will concentrate his six armor clads, now running the blockade at Cuba, to some central point on the Atlantic coast, where he can reach quickly the northern or southern seaboard. Under this plan the enemy's ships can be intercepted whether they come to
