THERE is a strong sentiment among newspaper publishers in Ohio in favor of dealing with railroads on a cast basis. Yet there are always men who will retard such a movement. If re quired they would give up their col mmus to the railroads and accept in return an annual ticket for hand-car privileges and then sign a contract that they would not sue the company f they should be run down by the xpress.

SPEAKING of phantom hospitals, John Wanamaker referred in a recent uldress to a little ancient history that will be familiar to the people of this onnty. He said: "At the last seson of the Legislature the approprialion committee was obliged to rethe most deserving hospitals of the ntate. The interdependence of our social life is aptly illustrated by cases of this notors.

The question of responsibility for crimes committed under dual consciousness is one of the gravest which law and medicine alike can have to face and determine. It is not without the bounds of reason to suppose that our education in the story of the brain's byways may lead us perchance to form judgments even of criminal acts more consistent with morey than have often been delivered, and to regard apparently irrational offenses with a charity which is none the less real in that it is founded upon a knowledge of the weakness and ir-regularities that beset the working of the brain.—"Some Byways of the Brain," by Andrew Wilson, M. TWO PATIENTS.

The Story of a Young Physician and the Moral Thereof. A young physician living in another city was once called to see a patient at a time when he was himself in a state of moral crisis. He had been present two days before at a consultation on the case of an eminent citizen, and the doctors had disagreed. By all of his own study and that a certain operation desired by two of his colleagues in consultation would result in the death of the patient. The fourth physician believed as he did, but when he spoke it was to assent to the opinions of the two elder men, in the hope that their wisdom was assured and that the man's life might be saved. The old doctors had their way. The patient died next day un-der the hand of the skilled younger man, whose conscience promptly entered into revolt of his whole nature against his own individual relation to the conditions of his profession. After a sleepless night he was called to the bedside of a second well known citizen, a man suffering from "Americanitis"—crushing overwork whose system was a little shaken up by a fall from a bicycle and who had a slight feverish cold attended by an inability to hold up his head. The young doctor, being, as we have said, in a state of moral crists, said to the patient: "In bed! That's good. Stay there for a week. Don't see Stay there for a week. Don't ent anything if you can possibly help it. Drink plenty of cold water. Forget business." To the patient's wife he said: "He's all right. It's time he had a rest. Be sure there is plenty of fresh air in the room night and day. Don't let any one talk business to him for a week," He went away without giving a tablet or leaving a prescription. And next day he decided to quit the profession, so that when he heard inter how harrifled people Specimen Copies Sent Free Send for One were to learn that Mr. A. had died under his hand and that he had told Mr. B. that nothing ailed him he only smiled grimly and said nothing.
