THE MILKING STOOL.

An Article of Widespread Common Use Not Made In Factories.

A man who had seen in pictures milking stock compled by milkmalds engaged in milking cows that stood plaudly switching off a fly new and then and lookdrawally our upon a lovely summer decape, thought to bimself that, taking account the enormous number of In this country that were daily illard, those neast he an enermous number of militing stools used, and therefore that the militing stool roust be a considerable from of manufacture, and that it might even be that there were factories that made nothing close. With this idea in mind he set out to get some facts converning the trade in milking stools. At two establishments for the sale of dairy sup-plies, where he saw a great variety of all sorts of things for dairy use, the inquirer was informed that they did not sell milking stools and had never heard of them as an article of trade. It was quite trace that there were many thousands of them in dally use, but they were made by the farmers themselves. It wouldn't pay to farmers themselves. It wouldn't pay to from all points in Pennsylvania, Tickets to make them to sell, cheaply as they could be made, because the farmer could make them cheaper will and the make them cheaper will and the could make the could be sold June 13th inclusive. Into those holes would be driven pegs for legs. But not all milking steads are so claimanto as this. Two dairymen who were asked for information on the subject said that they had never seen a milking stool for sale in any store, city or country; that every farmer made his own, and that it might be something far simboard. Whatever it was, the milking steal was something that was found or could be made on the farm.

"No such thing as an ornamented milk-ing stool of any kind?" asked the inquirer, "There's generally some cow in the herd that does whatever ornamenting there is done." said one of the dairymen. and from this the inquirer was led to infer that the cow does not always stand placidly, lastly switching off a dy and gasing drowsily meanwhile off upon a peaceful summer landscape, but that there is now and then a cow that occasionally rears and tears and upsets the milk pall and kicks the milking stool into very small

Inquiry at the offices of two large dairy establishments elicited the same information. Indeed, it was not until the inquir ar had sought the establishment of a whole sale chair manufacturer that he found the milking stool produced as an article of trade. The stool so made is a disk of wood with short, turned legs, called by the more explorious name of the milk maid's stool, and sold, finished in the natural word, not for milking purposes, but in city stores, to women who paint, enamed and ornament them in one way and another or adorn them with ribbons, making of them useful or decorative articles of furniture.
