Finding a Thief by Means of a Bowl of Water-What the Boy Saw In a Drop of Ink-How a Dishonest Woman Was Neatly Trapped.

Magicians abound at the present day in all the great centers of civilization-chiremancers, spiritualists, seers of the crystal, mahatmas, thought readers, astrologers, interpreters of the cards and the offee grounds. But they give no assistance to the police, says the London Standard. The divine power which animates them refuses to do such mean service. It is a pity. They may scorn the profits which would flow in. But philanthropy is their strong point in general, and they could confer no benefit upon a fellow creature more heartly appreciated than the restoration of his lost property. Moreover, they are all auxious to make prose lytes, and what means could be more effect Ive? Savants and personages whose conversion would be a triumph have pro-claimed that they are ready to believe all that is asked of them if the adept will perform that miracle. But the spirits or something forbid, and it is no use to argue.

thing forbid, and it is no use to argue. Fortunately there are magicians elsewhere whose protecting genius is not so particular, and very striking feats have been attributed to them by persons whose honesty and intelligence stand above question. We may take for example the evidence of Mr. Swettenham, C. B., now resident of Perak. Hopeless of recovering some valuable property which had been stolen from him, he followed the advice of friends and sought a wizard. Two professors assured him that they would do hat business "in a liffy," but they did not keep appointments made. A third performed his operations privately and denounced the thief to Mr. Swettenham, who expressed a wish to see the process by who expressed a wish to see the process by which he had been identified. A large arthenware bowl was filled with water and a piece of cotton was tied over the top —as it were a drum. Mr. Swettenham wrote the name of every person who had been in his house when the robbery was committed, folded up each paper and laid one of them on the drum. He wrote the names in English, which upon the tips of their fingers, and the wiz-ard read a chapter of the Koran. Nothing happened. So the slip was withdrawn and another substituted. Four names thus dis-missed, a fifth was faid upon the cotton. "The reading had scarcely commenced when the bowl began to turn slowly round, the supporters letting their hands go round with it until it twisted itself out f their fingers and fell on the floor with a considerable bang and a great spluttering of water through the thin cover. It was the name of the person already mentioned by the chief." Mr. Swettenham did not tell him so, but asked for a repetition of the ordeal. Always the same result followed. "It was a curious coincidence cer-tainly. The name disclosed was that of $1 per visi, or 5 vinis and large visi powder, for $5 | the person whom there was most reason to suspect, but beyond that I learned nothing." Most people would describe the sucous coincidence. Lane told an interesting story in his

But the boy must have been if familiar with the ink "business," by report at least, seeing that it is the regular practice of the magicians in Egypt. He and all his fellows may very well have known who it was that stole Mr. Salt's gastia, and of course he could describe a laborer working in the garden whom he had just quitted. The things he had seen in the ink were named—it was only necessary, in fact, to say "Yes." One must ask why any robberies in Cairo remained un-detected if this professor could name the thief with the assistance of any little boy

There were plenty of his sor. Lane had some fascinating adventures with them, as most people know. And they charged some fascinating auvernaged as very small fee. When he examined the article, it proved to be gilt brass. Ho ran walling to the agha, who pitied him, but there was no clew to the identity of the woman. It was a pretty puzzle—the the woman. It was a pretty puzzle—the most experienced and ingenious of our magistrates would have "given it up." But the agha said: "Go home; take all thy property away and lock thy shop. Tomorrow be there early, and when thou hast opened thy shop, ery, 'Alas, for my property!" Then take in thy hands two clode and beat thyself with them, and ery, 'Alas, for the property of others!' and whoever says to thee, 'What is the matter?' do thou answer: 'A pledge that I had from a woman is lost. If it were my own, I should not so much imment it.' 's and so on. The pawnbroker did as he was told. on The pawnbroker did as he was told. Presently the woman heard of this and came on a donkey, demanding her ornament. Unable to get it, she applied to the agha for a summons, as we say. "What was thy armament?" he asked. Lane told an interesting story in his "Modern Egyptians," upon the authority, as he expressly states, of Mr. Salt, her mujesty's consul general. This gentleman had been robbed. He sent for a famous magician, who undertook to show the guilty person to any boy who had not reached the age of puberty. A number of boys were working in Mr. Salt's garden.
He sent for one, thus satisfying himself that collusion was impossible. Taking the child's right hand, he drew a diagram upon the paim and in the center of it made a little pool of ink. Into this pool he told the boy to look steadfastly. Then he burned incense and written charms, at the same time commanding various objects to appear in the ink. Each of these objects the boy siw, as he declared. Finally the thild was summoned. "He described his stature, counternance and dress, said beat the moment was Engine Blair, a guard and messenger for the Wells-Fargo Express company at an early time.

The prisoner was handcuffed, of curso, and Blair sat tessile him in the cusch. It was generally thought that Bill's friends would try to rescue him somewhere on the road, which led Blair to say to him:

'Bill, I've heard that your friends are going to get you away from no between here and Carson if they can. Idealy enough they will, but it's fair to tell you that it'll never do you any good, for I shall shoot you dend at the first break they unke. It's well to have the matter unifer

Dayls was captured and tried for this, but he revealing when the by revealing where $50,000 of the plunder was hidden be get off with a year or two in the penitentiary. He took to the read again after his release, and one night, as the stage rattled along between Ploche and Elko, with Blair sliting on the box beside the driver. Bill Davis, with a confederate, appeared at the read-ide and drew down a shotgun on the messenger.

'Hands up, Blair!' he called. 'T've got There was no time for Bluir to use a weapon, but he rolled off the coach to the ground on the further side before the rolber could fire. He dashed round the rear of the couch to Davis, wrested the shorgun from the robber's hands and shot him dead with his own weapon. The other robber ran, and Blair chased him four hours through the sagebrush capturing him at last. You can judge by this what kind of man Blair was, and his killing of Davis was only one of many deadly shooting at fairs he had in discharge of his duty. Ho killed so many men on the Wells-Pargo lines and upset so many schemes of robbery that it seemed certain, sooner of later, that he would be killed in revenge To save his life the express company re-tired him with a pension, and he settled in Ploche. After his long career of danger on the road, he lived quietly at Ploche to die at last from injuries received through his being run over by a load of wood. "By the way, I have heard the story of the killing of the desperado, Sam Brown, from the lips of Van Sickle, the reachman who shot blim. You know perhaps what a terror Brown was in the early history of Nevada. He was naturally bad. Murder was a pastime, and to discustowed a man was a pastine, and to discussed a man-in a barroom was part of a pleasant even-ing's entertainment to Long Haired Brown. There was no law in those days, and a man like he could run his course a long time without punishment. Brown was one of a gang who operated along the main trail between Carson City and the Utah line without punishment. Utah line robbing emigrants coming over-land to California. Van Sickle's ranch, 12 miles below Carson, was a sort of way sta-tion or hotel for travelers. Brown thought the ranchman had ill used him in some transaction and he let his feelings be known, so when he rode up to Van Sickle's house one afternoon the owner thought is prudent to hall him from the doorway and ask what he wanted.

"'I want you!' growled Sam Brown in a tone that made Van Sickle turn back into the house in a hurry. Brown sent a shot after him as he went through the doorway and then dismounted, tied his horse to a pest and went into the house to find the ranchman. He got as far as the dining room, and, not finding Van Sickle. came back, stopped for a drink at a little side room that served as a bar and then went out to his herse, mounted him and rode on in the direction of Lute Old's ranch, eight miles away. After he was gone Van Sickle appeared with his rifle.

"You must kill Brown today, or he'll kill you,' said Jake Moore, Van Stekle's clork. and sent word to his noighbors. In a short time a party was organized and startshort time a party was organized and started in pursuit of Brown, four or five menriding in a wagon and Van Sickhe and two others on horseback. Four miles out they came in sight of Brown just as dusk was falling. He turned, and Van Sickle fired at him with his rifle, missing him. Brown rode on, and they lost sight of him in the darkness. Lute Old's ranch was a mile off the trail. Van Sickle felt sure that Brown would go those, and, with the other two would go there, and, with the other two mounted men, took a cross cut to the ranch, hoping to get there before he did. He was not there, and Lute Old said he had not seen him. As they stood talking in the shadow of the barn some one came riding up in the darkness, and Lute said: "A HAND SAW IS A GOOD THING, BUT NOT TO "That's Brown; I know by the jingle of his spurs." "He walked over to the fonce to let down the bars, and as brown role into the yard Van Sickle with his rifle shot the desperade dead from his horse. When Van Sickle told the story, he showed me a six
