A NEW days ago we referred to the trouble in handling supplies for the army at Tampa which was brought to public notice by newspaper articles written by Poultney Bigelow, who blamed the trouble upon inefficient staff officers, a question which he was readin -London Fun. Geni. Miles disputed, placing the blame upon the railroads. It now appears that Bigelow sized the situation up more correctly than the commanding general, who accepted too implicitly the statements of his subordinates, as the railroad companies have conclusively shown that the trouble was due entirely to the the trouble was due entirely to the inexperience of the quartermaster at Port Tampa and the lask of information furnished him by the Quartermaster General, although suggestions had been made by the railroads to that officer which would have facili-tated the work greatly to the benefit of the railroad as well as the army.
