The Santiago Campaign.

Although the unexpected resort of form glows with hoevera's fleet to Santiago was all with its that made as select that port and its surroundings as the scene of our first campaign in this, yet, now that the choice is made: its advantages are manifest.

First and foremost, the capture or destruction of that fleet will of itself fully repay the labor and cost of the campaign. Cervera's ships would make fine additions to our navy, while if they should be blown up or Shenandoah and Vicinit sunk to avoid surrender, that would probably be the end of Spain's naval career on this side of the Atlantic.

Next, since Santiago is Spain's chief stronghold in southeastern Cuba, its surrender will be the breaking of her power at that end of the island. The patriots have always been stronger there than anywhere else and after there than anywhere else, and after Beer and Porter. will have everything their own way It is not improbable that Blanco would then withdraw his troops to the defence of Havana, and, at all events, Garcia will find all the reeruits be wants flocking to his colors.

With the fall of Santiago we shall probably find a part of Shafter's force released for the Porto Rico campaign. and with most of Sampson's fleet also set free for operations against San Juan, the rapid conquest of that is, hand will be assured. Santiago is more than half way from Tampa to San Juan, and the experience gained San Juan, and the experience gained the Sicrondonn Renovating Company's plant, in moving Shafter's corps on transports and landing it will be of great carpets, mattreases, and do general upholster value for the Porto Rico operations, ing work Still another great advantage will be that of securing Santiago de Cuba as a naval base for the remainder of the war. The island is 650 miles long, and Key West, our present base, is near its western end. It is not unlikely that after the reduction of Santingo we shall drive the Spaniards also from some port on the northern side of the island, east of Hayana. which will furnish good shelter for

Thus the material and moral re- Millions of Dollars snits of success at Santiago will be great, and we could also hardly choose a better point for accustoming our troops to the climate of Cuba, and for campaigning at this season with due regard to their health. New York Sun.
