A CURIOUS CANDLESTICK.

Novel Use That Was Made of an Open Barrel of Gunpowder.

Historical students, when called upon to describe the relations of events, especially those that occur in themselves, usually, that are recorded to have happened in the lives of persons whose careers are separated by a long period of time, when the said events have a striking similarity between them, are wont to regard the first narrative as the prototype of the latter as a case of transference. Sometimes this may be the correct view to take, but it is commonly a dangerous proceeding to insist upon. An example has occurred to me recently which illustrates this.

At East Butterfield village, on the banks of the Trent, some eight miles northwest of this place, there lived in the middle of the century a shopkeeper named Marshall. He was a general dealer, supplying nearly all the wants of his neighborhood. Above this man's shop and adjoining outhouses was a long chamber, open to the roof, in which he kept small articles as he had not room for in his somewhat small shop. Among other things this room contained a candlestick, which was at the service of such of the women of the town as made him a small payment.

One winter evening several women were engaged in mauling when one of them knocked down her solitary candlestick and, being probably of waxenware, it was broken. Work for the night was nearly over. It did not seem worth while to fetch another, so one of the women took the still burning candle—happily it was not a very short one—and struck it into some black, dusty-looking stuff which she had noticed in a barrel standing near. Soon, however, one of these good dames had occasion to descend into the shop, and, encountering Marshall there, naturally began to apologize for the candlestick having suffered.

We may conceive what was the shopkeeper's horror when he heard what was the substitute that had been found, for he knew at once that the candle was standing in a cask of gunpowder. He rushed up stairs and was just in time. He made "a sup with his two hands," as he said, "so that no sparks could get to the powder," and drew the candle calmly out without uttering a sound. His work is over when all danger was over. He was told, of a kind not uncommonly so on board of vessels and coal barges or rivers, but such as are discouraged swiftness.

Marshall told me of this very soon after it occurred. The day I am unable to fix, but am sure that it was before the year 1854. In the year 1861 "The Deposition From the Castle of York" in the Seventeenth Century" were published by the Surtees Society. In a note in this work by its editor, the late Canon Haine, the following passage occurs. The parallelism between the two narratives as to the way the candle was removed from danger is very striking:

"Newcastle had a very narrow escape about 1684. An apprentice going by with a candle into a loft which contained many barrels of gunpowder and much combustible material thoughtlessly struck the candle into a barrel, of which the head had been knocked off, to serve for a candlestick. He saw the danger and fled. A laborer ran into the loft, and, joining both his hands together, drew the candle softly up between his middlemost fingers, so that if any snuff had dropped it must have fallen into the hollow of the man's hand."

Record Breaking Trip.
On Friday the Reading's 49 minute train, celebrated its initial run of the season by establishing a record, making the run of 34 miles from Canby to Atlantic City in 54 minutes. This record is a fine one and a quarter from the best time made by last season's crew. The train was drawn by engine No. 1025, built by Baldwin's in May of last year, and a duplicate of No. 1067, which was the flyer last year. The train was made up of a combination car, three coaches and a Pullman, and on board were several officials of the road, in addition to Superintendent Snelman, of the old-time Locomotive Works, and the inspector of the Glenside Eastern Railway, who is in this country inspecting railroads. The train made an average speed of 72.9 miles an hour. —Philadelphia Record, July 20, 1898.

POLITICAL POINTS.

The Socialistic party in this county is organizing for the present campaign. They will place a full county ticket in the field, and their leaders claim a large following among the dissatisfied of both parties.

The three present members of the Legislature from the Fourth district are candidates for re-election. We have so far failed to see any good reason why they should return to Harrisburg.

The outlook for Republican success this year is exceedingly bright.

The Republicans should be exceedingly careful as to who they elect as delegates to the nominating conventions. Here is where mistakes have been made in the past. Select good men to represent you in the conventions, and they will result in strong candidates being named for the various offices.

The Democratic members of the School Board are said to be moving with much caution in the selection of teachers and janitors, as one of their number is a candidate for office. The appointments when made will be scanned with a critical eye by the people.

There is no doubt in reference to the declaration of the Republican convention upon the financial question.

The Schuykill Democrats have nominated Wm. A. Marr for Clerk of Common Pleas Court. The Schuykill Democrats are evidently tied to the corporation pettifogger for if there is one man more than another who deserves to be turned down by voters it is Wm. A. Marr the attorney for the crooked corporations and the scoundrel of the local officials of that locality. Marr has been a leech upon Butler township for many years and at the same time has been the corporation expert, deceiving the people by his demagogic utterances and helping the tricksters to loot the township and county.

Pulled Down the Flag.
The residents of Park Place raised a beautiful American flag Saturday night with imposing ceremonies and a festival. At midnight a man named P. J. Loyden was discovered in the act of removing the flag. He was arrested yesterday. He told Justice May at Mahanoy City last night that he was sorry for his act and claimed he was drunk when he committed it. The Justice put him under $500 bail. During the hearing Loyden was greatly humiliated by a woman returning to him the money he had contributed to the flag and pole purchase. The affair caused quite a stir at Park Place.
