GUBER'S DEATH.

How the Fugitive Met His Death in the West.

News of the recent years have excited more local interest than that of Anthony Guber, whose death was announced by the Herald a few days ago. The fact that Guber was a fugitive from justice, coupled with the apparent mystery surrounding his death, has made the case a subject of much discussion, and therefore the information furnished by a copy of the Elkland (Ind.) Daily Truth will be read with much interest.

Guber's parents sent instructions to have the remains sent on here by express and it is expected they will arrive to-night to-morrow.

The copy of the newspaper article states that Guber and three companions died from drinking alcohol to excess. The men with Guber were William 1846, of Chicago, aged 20; W. K. B. of St. Paul, Minn., aged 23; and D. Donovan, of Canton, Mich., aged 25. Last Thursday afternoon the four men were found at the side of a road in the suburbs of Elkland. Both were dead. Guber was in a fence corner, grouting with pain. B. B.'s cold, still body was found close to that of Guber, and Donovan was moaning under a neighboring tree. All were victims of wood alcohol. Efforts were made to get information from Guber, but failed. Guber subsequently got up and walked away. Donovan died in an hour. Guber was arrested later. He seemed perfectly sober and told the police that he had not been near the other men at any time. The Courier believed his story and released him, notwithstanding the police were positive in their identification. Shortly after seven o'clock Friday morning Guber was found lying with his face in the sand beneath the road side in the Lake Shore yards at Elkland. He was alive but died within two hours after being found. Guber had several meals alcohol after the Courier released him. A restaurant was found in Guber's pocket, together with a slip of paper bearing his name and Shenandoah address.
