better known as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, has made a record for its remarkable cures of asthma. Cases that have been considered beyond hope or help have been cured by this remedy. We give two examples of such cures out of the many on record—
"My mother has been a great sufferer from asthma for the past ten years, and her recovery is almost without a parallel. On account of her advanced age—over seventy—we had but little hope of ever seeing her well again; but we are sincerely grateful to inform you that she has been entirely cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."

"I was a sufferer for a long time from asthma, vainly endeavoring to procure relief in the use of ordinary remedies. At length I was induced to try a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The first bottle afforded me so much benefit that I could not resist the use of the remedy until entirely cured."

TWO QUEER ANIMALS
THE MARABOU AND THE HYENA OF CENTRAL AFRICA.

Both Feed on Carnion, and the Bird and Beast Often Battle For Their Food—Fairly the Giants That Are Light as Air.

The ugliest stocks in the world are found in southern Asia and central Africa. Their flesh colored wings are only partially covered with stiff, wiry feathers, and hang out on the breast like a disgusting pouch, which answers the purpose of a crop. One of the largest of these stocks is the marabou. It stalks about the great sandy plains of central Africa with a composure and lordly grandeur, as if it were the most beautiful bird in the world. Its body feathers are of a dull metallic green color and its wings and tail are dingy black. Looking at the awkward creature, no one would suspect that under its ungainly wings it carried the most exquisite and fatty little plumes, so airy that it takes basketfuls of them to weigh an ounce. They are pure white, and so much desired for trimming that the bird is vigorously hunted by the natives, who sell these dainty feathers to traders for a very large price.

Hunting the marabou is attended with great difficulty, as the bird possesses wonderful cunning, and often contrives to outwit the most skillful hunter. With laughable dexterity it measures the ground between itself and its pursuer and takes very good care not to exhaust itself by too rapid flight. If the hunter moves slowly, the bird at once adopts an equally easy pace, but if the hunter quickens his steps, the bird is off like a quail. It is very difficult to get within gun range of this calculating creature, but the natives adopt a novel means of capturing it, which the bird, with all its astuteness, is unable to comprehend and falls an easy victim. A tempting morsel of meat is tied to the end of a long stout cord, which the skillful hunter flings to a great distance, so he would a lasso, the bait falling as near the flying bird as he can aim it. He then crouches himself hastily behind a bush or creeps low on the sand. The marabou, which always keeps its eye on the hunter, seeing this vainly, quietly stoops and devours the bait, when it is easily secured by the hunter, who runs toward it, coiling the rope as he goes.

The marabou feeds on carrion, like the vulture. Its throat is very large, and it will greedily devour anything that comes in its way. In the swamps and plains around Khartoum on the Nile are immense flocks of marabous, and they are so daring as to come to the slaughter houses on the outskirts of the city in search of food, and while ox cars and skin boxes with hock-stripped have been found in the crops of specimens which have been killed. This bird is a very skillful fisher. It haunts the low, marshy islands in the rivers and lakes of central Africa, with elephants, monkeys, flamingoes and many varieties of birds for its companions, and gains its principal food from the water. They often go in companies of 10 to 15 to fish. Wading in the water, the birds form a circle, which they gradually draw together, gathering the frightened fish in the center of the net, upon which their long bills and quick movements they speedily provide themselves with a hearty meal.

Although marabou manna has been seen proudly parading round with a brood of diminutive downy young ones, ashy and streaking in color, it does not seem to have the same habits that naturalists have been unable to determine when and how it builds its nest. The natives assert that it nests in high trees, but their statement is not confirmed.

In captivity the marabou is lord of the inclosure, and in zoological gardens, where specimens have been confined, no other birds, nor even small beasts, dare approach the feeble trough until the hunger of this impudent bird is satisfied and it has retired to the warmest corner for a nap. The immense strength of its bill fighting for food it will often overcome the largest vulture, and wage successful battles with beasts of prey.

The hyena inhabits the same portions of Asia and Africa as the marabou, and travelers give accounts of terrible contests between these two singular members of the animal kingdom. The hyena is called the vulture among beasts, as it prefers carrion for its food, and as long as it can find dead animals to devour it leaves the flocks and herds in peace. Cowards by nature, it rarely attacks man or beast unless driven to desperation by hunger.

The striped hyena inhabits the northern latitudes of Africa, Persia and Syria, and is sometimes called hyena dog. It is found in large numbers in the vast plains of South Africa. The hyena is a strange looking beast. It has a big head and a heavy, shaggy mane. The hind part of its body is much lower than its shoulders and its hind legs awkward, shambling manner of walking, which is both ludicrous and hideous.

This creature rarely shows itself by day, but when the shadows of night fall on the plains and forests it comes out from its home among the rocks and caverns in search of food. African travelers are much annoyed by it. When the camp is silent and all are sleeping, the hyena comes prowling round, uttering hoarse human cries, and should it fail to find sufficient camp refuse to satisfy its hunger, some poor donkey is sure to be torn in pieces by its terribly sharp teeth.

Several animals have been the subject of so much superstition. In ancient times it was believed that a dog went mad if a hyena turned its evil eye upon it, and the beast was believed by many to be a wicked sorcerer, who sends forth in human form by day and at night assumed the shape of a hyena. The poor and ignorant peasantry of Arabia, even at the present day, believe in the evil eye of this beast and are afraid to look at it lest they should incur the wrath of the wicked spirit which they imagine dwells the north in its night form.

The poor hyena, however, far from being an evil spirit, is a real blessing to the regions it inhabits, as it is a natural scavenger, provided by the kind wisdom of nature to clear the ground of much loathsome and decaying matter, thereby rendering the air clearer and purer and more healthful.—Exchange.

Another wreck occurred yesterday on the first plane at North Mahanoy colliery, where Frank Wertz met his death last Thursday. The smash was caused by a bad rail, which threw both barney and dumper off the track, but fortunately no one was injured. Judge Stewart, of York, issued an injunction forbidding the Jefferson school directors from paying out any more money for the new school house, because the borough has already exceeded its legal indebtedness.

Wrecked by a Natural Gas Explosion.
Kokomo, Ind., Jan. 17.—The residence of Charles Null was wrecked by a natural gas explosion last night. Mrs. Null was fatally burned, and Mrs. Marion Smith and Miss Aliza Burns are suffering from severe burns about the face and arms. The explosion was caused by an accumulation of gas in the cellar, into which Mrs. Null went with a kerosene lamp.

USED BY THE NOBILITY.
The Remedy That Makes People Well—Paine's Celery Compound.

In every civilized country rich and poor alike have found restored health and new vigor in Paine's celery compound.

"Hard-working people of ordinary means are to be congratulated," says an English writer in reviewing the scientific work of the last quarter of a century, "upon having seen the best that modern medical skill offers. Paine's celery compound proves that the science of medicine has kept pace with the wonderful progress which characterizes the life of the present generation."

The astonishing reputation that this most wonderful of all remedies has acquired is principally due to the world-wide recommendation and endorsement of men and women of the highest business and social standing, as well as of those in humbler but no less important positions who have themselves discovered its merits.

Adeline, Countess Schimmelmann, whose portrait is here given, in a recent letter to the Wells & Richardson Company, speaks of friends of hers who have been benefited by Paine's celery compound, and who first advised her to recommend it to her sick friends; the Countess, as is well-known, is a prominent member of the Danish court. Her coming to this country has been much talked of.

Her real object was one of charity, for she is using her great wealth and influence this winter in assisting the Danish people in the western States. She is stopping in Chicago, and from there writes her straightforward endorsement of Paine's celery compound. Women who are easily excited, who waste energy worrying over trifles who are often sufferers from sick headache and nervousness, should read the plain, unbiased statements of what Paine's celery compound has done for other women.

Among the diseases that cause a vast amount of needless suffering that may be readily cured by Paine's celery compound are biliousness, torpid liver, headache, sleeplessness, dizziness, constipation, dyspepsia and general nervousness and debility.

No man or woman who is continually ailing can successfully carry on business, or be of much real comfort to the household. And only a thoroughly nourished body that has all the needed vigour, and therefore, harmony, material promptly removed from the blood and tissues can be healthy. When either of these vital conditions of adequate repair or elimination are incompletely done, the organs need just such help as Paine's celery compound is fitted to give. No other remedy is so valuable.

Where other remedies have failed, Paine's celery compound will succeed.
