MAN A NONCLIMBER

He Shows a Singular Repugnance to Becoming "Arboreal."

Climbing runs in families, for steeple-jacks are often the sons of fathers who were in the business, but it is somewhat odd that man, though he learns to swim so well that armed only with a knife he can encounter a shark in its native element, and judged by the extent of hi mining operations in comparison with the size of his body surpasses by a thousand times all animals that work underground, has never become a good climber or shown the slightest tendency to become 'arbo-real,' as he has become aquatic and subterrancean.

South sea babies that cannot walk will rell into the sea and swim, collier boys at 14 will take pick and lamp and de-seend into the mine almost as naturally as young moles, but we believe that in spife the danger from wild beasts in forest regions and the fact that in such places there is ten times more life on the level of the tree tops than on the ground there is no single instance of a tribe which, proper ly speaking, has become "arboreal" an learned to climb like monkeys. Though not a few make buts in trees they approach these by ladders, and except in the huts which they use as a refuge and sleeping place they spend their time on the ground. Even in forests where the upper levels of the trees are so closely laced together that a comparatively slight adaptation would enable the Indians to progress from tree to tree, and where nearly the whole of the fruit and the greater part of the birds and animals used for food are found only in this 'upper story," man is not, and always refuses to become, a 'climbing animal. Natural repugnance to this form of enterprise seems characteristic of savage men and even of animals which run no risks vlastever. African natives who have only lived in one storied buts show the greatest dislike to going up stales and have been known to creep up on required to ascend stairs for the first time often refuse to do so except under strong persuasion and with evident reluctance.— London Spectator.

A HEALTHY MAN.

Here Are the Points That Go to Make

Here are the points of a healthy man If you have them all you may, barring accidents, count on being a centenarian. If you have most of them, you'll reach a ripe old age, but even if you have only a few don't be alarmed, for many apparently crazy human machines last a surprisingly long time.

First, your body and limbs should be plump, but the plumpness should be of the firm and muscular, not the fleshy type. Your figure ought to be erect, and, whether rou are tall or short, well proportioned. Your complexion should be clear and fresh. It is usually not well with you when your face is pale, sallow, florid or subject to sudden flushings. But that, of course, is the exception, not

Your head should not be very large, or at least if it is large your neck, shoulders and chest ought to correspond in size. If you feel your pulse, it should be regular; if it drops a beat now and again or beats very fast and excitedly after the least exertion or emotion then the heart is weak. Your breathing should be tranquil and in audible. Any sounds mean that the pas-sages are more or less clogged.

You should not know you have a stom-ach—that is to say, as a rule. Of course there are times when that organ gets out of order in the healthlest individual, and then it is always sure to make its owner aware of its existence. You should always, except when the weather is bitterly cold, feel comfortably warm through your whole body, even to the tips of the fingers and toes. Otherwise something is wrong with the circulation or the heat producing apparatus.

You should have sound sleep, without dreams or nightmares, and it should not last too long or too short—say, eight to eight and a half hours every night.

Your voice should not be hourse, and you should be a stranger to sore throats. Your appetite should not be too great or too small, while you should not be a suf-ferer from headaches, giddiness or neuralgia, and, of course, you should not have palpitations or fainting or various veina.
