MYSTERIES OF VENUS.

Speculations and Reckonings Comcorning the Beautiful Planet. The most beautiful planet and the one that comes nearest to the earth and most resembles the earth in size is at the same time the most mysterious. Is Venus a living world or dead one—that is to say, is it in a condition to support inhabitants, and is it probable that such inhabitants are there, or, on the other hand, is it un-suited for their presence and barren of Hving forms?

These questions astronomers at present are unable to answer, but their efforts to answer them and the observations that they have made of the mysterious planet esces an almost startling interest. First let us briefly recall what Venus is.

It is a globe like our earth and of very nearly the same magnitude, having a diameter of about 7,700 miles, while that of the earth is a little more than 7,900 miles. So nearly of the same size are the two planets that if we could view them from an equal distance we should be un-able without the aid of instruments of measurement to detect any difference between them. The substance of Venus is slightly lighter, bulk for bulk, than that which composes the earth, but the difference in this respect is so little that again it would require special examination to distinguish by weight between a cubic foot of the soil of Venus and an equal amount of the soil of the earth. It follows that on Venus the force of gravitation or the weight of bodies does not greatly differ from that on the earth. If we could step upon Venus, we should find that we had except perhaps on the race track.

But this planet, so like the earth in many respects, is very different from our globe in its situation. The earth's dis-tance from the sun is 98,000,000 miles; the distance of Venus from the sun is 67,-000,000. This difference becomes a matter of great importance when we consider the effects which the sun produces upon the two planets. Heat and light, as everybody knows, vary inversely as the square of the distance. When we compare the quare of the earth's distance from the un with the square of Venus' distance, we find that the former is about double the latter. This means that Venus on the average gets twice as much heat and exists in connection with the good digestion; ight from the sun as the earth gets.

On the earth, when we pass from the arctic region toward the equator, we find the number of living forms and the variety and intensity of the manifestations of life continually increasing until in the equatorial zone earth, sea and air are all crowded with animate and growing the results. STORY OF A VIOLIN.

ONE FOR WHICH FABULOUS SUMS HAD BEEN OFFERED.

The Queer Disclosure That Was Made When This Bare Old Instrument and Its Owner Were Caught In a Raticond Smash Up.

Among the fallacies tenacionsty clung to by persons who fancy themselves to be possessed of what is called the 'artistic perament is that one which portrays the soulful man as an invariable scrub when it comes to business propositions, said a well known Washington violinis This is an amtable delusion which I am bout to puncture to some small extent by relating a story of very recent occurrence as to its finale, with the details of which I am perfectly familiar. It's a story of a lin and of the genuinely gifted owner

This man is and has been for the past 20 years or so one of the finest of American violinists. He is a Bostonian and has lived in Boston all of his life, except when he has been concert touring the country and he gave that up some years ago. He is a man of tine family, and he traces his ancestry very directly indeed back to the Mayflower and beyond. There has been a violinist in his family ever since the Mayflower got over to this side, and also a violin. The violin brought over by the Mayflower progenitor of the Massach family was a genuine and very valuable Stradivarius In fact, it is one of the great violins of the world today. It was handed down by him to his eldest son, whom he made into a violinist and thus transmitted from sire to son, going always the son who exhibited the greatest aptitude for the violin.

It fell into the hands of this Boston clinist of whom I am speaking more than 30 years ago, when he was a young lad. It was a beautiful instrument in finish, and its tone was magnificent. It was the one heirloom of the family regarding which the greatest amount of space was consumed in the many wills made by its owners since the early days of Massachusetts, and it has been cared for throughout its long life-well, as an orchid is violinists who came to the United States early in this century. Ole Bull made an enormous offer for it upon his first visit to the United States, and he wrote to the father of the Boston violinist unceasingly with regard to it from Europe, renewing and amplifying his offers. A deaf ear was turned to all of these offers. It was in-tended that the violin should always remain with the descendants of the man who brought it over in the Mayflower

"Well, some time ago this Boston violinist, while traveling from Boston to New York to take part in a concert, got into a railroad smush up. He was in the sleeper at the time of the collision, with his violin alongside of him. He was pretty badly hurt before he got out of the mass of wreckage, but not completely disabled. When he found himself extricated and an onlooker at the wrecking proceedings, he suddenly bethought him of his precious Strad. He had to be held to prevent him from elimbing back on top of the wreck to get at his instrument. After seven or eight hours, during which he hung about the wreck like a crazy man, his violin was with him and carefully pleked out the pleces of the wrecked violin. Inside of it up near the neck he found pasted some writing, done very small and fine, in the penmanship of the last century and date

This bit of writing was a confession It stated that this was not the great Strac that had been brought over in the May flower. The writer, who had inherited the violin before the middle of the last century, had been hard up for money, the pasted note went on to say. So on one of his European trips he had a precise duplicate of his glorious Strad made in Italy by an accomplished violin counterfeiter The genuine Strad he had sold to a great French violinist, and this instrument was out a perfect duplicate—a replica. the statement that he could not die and hand down to posterity a perpetual fraud. This is the trade the writer of the pasted note went on to mark of the short any that he had had the top of the country that he had had the head had the top of the country that he had had the top of the country that he had had the head had terfeit Strad removed and had pasted the onfession within, thus to in some meas ure salve his guilty conscience.

"This was a hard blow to the Boston violinist, as you may well believe. He went secretly to work to trace the original Strad that had been brought over by his ancestor in the Mayflower, and it did not take him long to ascertain that the Strad is now the cherished and priceless posses-sion of an aged German violinist. Then the Boston violinist had his broken counthe Boston violinist had his broken coun-terfeit Strad patched up by an expert, and when it was put together again it was found not to have lost a particle of its for-mer glorious tone. The Boston violinist put himself in correspondence with one of the violin collectors who had yearned for his instrument, stating frankly that the violin's outer appearance had been dam-aged in the railroad accident, but that its ne was uninjured, and offering it for ale at a slightly reduced figure—a matter still of several thousands of dollars. Of course the Boston violinist had carefully removed the pasted confession from the inside of the counterfeit Strad before having it patched up

"The collector came on to Boston and took the instrument at the Boston violin ist's figure, and it is now the collector's most highly prized instrument. The beauty of the story is that it's true down to the very last detail, just as I have told it. "Wherefore I guess the artistic temper-ament is able to take care of itself, even when it gets mixed up in matters of business."—Washington Star.

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

Doesn't Believe In Luck, but Thinks

Things Do Happen Curiously. "I don't believe in luck," said the re-tired burglar, "but it certainly is curious ow things happen sometimes. Going out of my house one morning about a quarte of it, I dropped my lantern putting it in my overcost pecket and broke the bulls-eye. I had another lamp in the house—a new, perfect lamp—but it had never been used and wasn't even filled, and it took me half an hour or more to fit up that lamp, and so of course I started out that "I had the house I was going to marked and I got there all right and got in and got to work. But it was tremendously disappointing. It was a good, big house, promising looking from the outside, but very lean inside—that is, as to stuff that was worth carrying off—silver all plated, was warth carrying off—silver all placed, and that sort of thing, and I didn't find a blessed thing down stairs worth taking away. Then I started up stairs, hopeful, of course, but the fact was the outlook of course, but the fact was the outlook was poor; no doubt about that. With things running so down stairs you couldn't expect much up. And I hadn't got half way up the stairs when I heard somebody at the front door outside putting a key in the lock. Say, that looked as though it knocked out the last chance there was of my getting anything, even if there was anything there to get, but of course I wanted to look out for myself, anyway, and I made for the top of the stairs to look for a dark pocket to stow myself in till I got a chance to pass out.

"But the second sound of the key put different complexion on things. The man with the key had been dining somewhere generously. He got in finally, though, and clambered up the stairs and made for a room at the front end of the hall, and got in there and turned up a light. Then I didn't bear anything of him for a minite or two, and then he upset som with a crash that just simply shook the house. I looked to see everybody in it come rushing around right off, but nobody came at all. Maybe they were used to such things, but anyhow they slept through this Then I heard him for some minutes at work getting off his clothes, and I heard him drop one shoe, and then for a time there was perfect stillness, and then I heard him snoring. When I ventured to look in, I didn't need my new bullseye: he had left his light burning brightly and there he was stretched out on th partly clothed and with one shoe still or and sleeping so soundly you couldn't have woke him up without shaking him, and it would have been hard work at that "When I had rounded up his stuff, I found a gold watch, a pair of diamond sleeve buttons, a pretty fair sized diamond pin and a pocketbook with $71 in it. It looked as though he carried the wealth of the household, and I should have missed him if I hadn't dropped my lamp. I don't believe in luck, but if I did I should certainly think there was luck in that."-New York Sun.
