There have been frequent intimations, since the fight was begun early in January, that Senator Quay contemplated withdrawing from the contest, but these rumors have proven groundless by subsequent events. The Senator's friends in command here, in luding ex-Senator Andrews, ex-Senator Coyle, who has attained such unenviable notoriety during the past few days, Frank Welling Leach and others, have repeatedly denied these rumors, and it is said these men are reluctant in allowing the Senator to withdraw.

It is well known that Senator Quay and the nembers of his family are auxious to end the contest, and the latter are especially urgent in their wishes that he should retire, A prominent Quay lieutenant, who held a conference with Quay just previous to his departure for the South, is authority for the candidate:

It is well known that Quay entered the ontest against his own desires in the first place, and was forced in the fight by his lieutenants.
