EXCITING RUNAWAY.

The Sagacity of Horses Save Them From Death.

A team of horses hitched to an oil tank wagon ran away at about seven o'clock this morning on Bowers street, and their flight led to a remarkable escape. It is said the horses were started by a boy meddling with the reins before the driver took charge of the horses after getting them out of the stable. Notwithstanding the tank and wagon weighed fully 1,900 pounds the horses sped southward at a remarkable rate. At the lower end of Bowers street there is a narrow roadway running east and west, and but a few feet south of this road there is a large and deep mine breach. Notwithstanding the speed at which they were going, the horses made a sharp turn west, missing the breach by about three feet. Had they tumbled into the opening with the tank both animals would have been killed. The runaways attempted to scale the Lehigh Valley Railroad embankment, and got over half way up, when the pitch of the embankment and weight of the tank proved too much for them, and they fell back against the tank, which rolled over upon its side. Neither the horses, nor the vehicle, sustained damage. The boy who started the team succeeded in safely escaping from the wagon seat at the start.

OPINIONS DIFFER!

Senator Quay's Appointment to Succeed Himself Discussed.

WANAMAKER'S SARCASTIC REMARKS

How Boies Penrose Says the Appointment Naturally Follows the Senator's Acquittal, and Says His Credentials Will be Accepted.

Philadelphia, April 22.—The jury in the Quay case returned a verdict of not guilty yesterday, and within two hours afterward Governor Stone appointed M. S. Quay to the seat in the national senate left vacant by the failure of the state legislature to elect a successor to Mr. Quay, whose term as senator expired on March 4. Governor Stone's communication appointing Senator Quay is addressed to the president of the senate, and is as follows: "By virtue of the power vested in me as executive of the state of Pennsylvania, under article one, clause two, section three, of the constitution of the United States, I hereby make temporary appointment of the Hon. Matthew St. Clair Quay to be United States senator from Pennsylvania until the next meeting of the Pennsylvania legislature, to fill the vacancy now existing in this state."

When the verdict acquitting Senator Quay was announced there was almost an uproar in the court, and it was suppressed by vigorous cries of "silence." Out in the corridor an indescribable scene followed. A great burst of cheering rent the air, hats went up and the hurrahs echoed and re-echoed. People rushed pell mell toward Quay, grasped his hands and ejaculated congratulations in all sorts of words. There was an ovation, which was made to restrain, but it was nothing to the scenes that followed after Quay left the court room.

Nothing has ever been seen in this city like the demonstration on the day he left the court. Then the crowd broke loose. With one will they formed around him, grasped his hands, screamed, waved their hats and threw them high above their heads. Quay's shoulders were gripped, his back was slapped, his coat caught hold from the mad enthusiasm that gave itself full vent.

Men of all sorts and conditions eagerly awaited Quay's coming with hands extended ready to congratulate him. Guards, policemen, workmen, several in civilian dress, and others shook hands with him. Quay's face beamed with unrestrained joy, and there was a suspicious moisture in his eyes. He had never seen anything so genuine, sincere and spontaneous. He was cheered on the sidewalk and given an ovation as he entered the hall. A great cheering reception as he reached the court room. Everywhere the tunnel formed by boards around the building going up at South Penn square he found it clogged so he could not get through. As he reached Broad and Chestnut streets a reserve policeman grasped his hand and there was demanded a handshake. This all got it, because Quay couldn't help himself. While the multitude thronged about him on the southwest corner of Broad and Chestnut streets about 20 women on the northwest corner of Broad and Chestnut streets, and a crowd of men took out kerchiefs and waved them vigorously, but Quay did not see them. He had to pass through an avenue of outstretched hands as he turned to go westward on Chestnut street, and when he entered the Land Title building, not far from the corner, a great crowd of men and women was whisked up to the 11th floor, where he met his son, "Dick" Quay, with whom he exchanged a few words, and then entered the office of Rufus E. Shapley, where personal friends were waiting to greet him.

Senator Quay soon after went to Washington. He was met at the station on his arrival in that city by a number of friends, who congratulated him upon the outcome of his trial and appointment as senator. There are many differing opinions as to the right of Governor Stone to fill the vacancy in the senate. Discussed in this question Senator Boies Penrose said: "Senator Quay having been the chosen of his party, as evidenced at the November election and in the legislative process, and his failure to be elected being the result of a technicality to the party by a bolting minority, his appointment naturally followed after his acquittal. As to the power of the governor to appoint there has been some question raised. The governor would not have made the appointment had he not been convinced of his authority by law and precedent. The Democrats in the senate are grateful to Mr. Quay for his aid in defeating the force bill, while the Republicans will be glad to strengthen their majority in the body. Under these circumstances there is no doubt that his credentials will be accepted at the meeting of congress next fall."

Ex-Postmaster General Wanamaker said last night: "The first shout of defiant exultation over Quay's acquittal has proceeded from the governor of the commonwealth, who has promptly appointed Quay a United States senator, without authority and in violation of law and in defiance of the will of the people as expressed by the votes of the legislature. Today's verdict settles nothing but the fate of the single bill of indictment upon which Mr. Quay was tried. The facts of the treasury speculation and jobbery elicited in his trial, and wholly unanswerable by him or any other witness, cannot be effaced by the surprising verdict of today. Quay has got his technical verdict, but the trial of corruptionists and public plunderers will still go on."

John George A. Jenks, in a telegram from Brookville, Pa., says: "As the vacancy in the senatorial office did not occur during the recess of the legislature of the state, the executive of the state has no power to make an appointment to fill such vacancy. Paragraphs one and two, section three, article one, constitution of the United States, revised statutes, sections 14 to 19, inclusive."

FOUND DEAD.

Children Make a Ghastly Discovery—Fool Play Suspected.

Port Clinton, April 22.—While some school children were roaming over the hills near this place yesterday afternoon, they came across the dead body of a man. It was on the hill back of the P. & R. Railway round house. The body was badly decomposed. People attracted by the alarm given by the children identified the remains as those of John Martin, aged 23 years, and a son of James Martin, of this place. The young man was employed as a brakeman on the P. & R. Railway. He disappeared from his home about a month ago. Fool play is suspected. The young man was a good spirit when he left home, and no other reason has thus far been assigned for his death. A gold watch and fifteen cents formed the contents of his pockets.

A Philadelphia Highwayman.

Philadelphia, April 22.—W. G. Werner, 17 years old, was murderously assaulted yesterday noon on Chestnut street, near Third, one of the most crowded sections of the city. Werner, who has been in Druggist Evans' employ for about a year, left the store shortly before 12 o'clock, taking with him over $1,500, which he was to deposit in his employer's account in the bank. He had just passed Third street when he was set upon by 22-year-old James Ballson, who pushed him into the doorway next to H. P. Johns' drug store, and was beating him over the head with an iron bolt when Mr. Johns, whose attention had been attracted by Werner's cries for help, went to his aid. Ballson then fled, but was soon captured. Werner is seriously injured.

ROBBERS THWARTED

Attack a Farmer and Find in Him a Tartar.

WAYLAIED HIM ON A HIGHWAY!

Mr. Hayseed Threw One of the Robbers Out of a Wagon and a Shot Caused the Horse to Carry the Victor Safely Away.

Myer Lindemuth, a farmer residing at Ringtown, had a thrilling experience with two highwaymen Thursday night, on the road leading to his home from Laven Run. Mr. Lindemuth observed two men straggling along the road in advance of the team and drove past them, with an exchange of courtesies.

The farmer was driving slowly, and had gone but a short distance beyond the two men when the foremost man got into the wagon and drew a blackjack and struck Lindemuth on the head. The latter dropped the reins and grappled with the stranger. In the struggle the highwayman was thrown from the rear of the wagon. As the latter picked himself up he drew a revolver and fired a shot at the farmer. The bullet went wide of the mark, but the report startled the horse and they dashed away, throwing the second highwayman to the road as he was trying to crawl into the wagon from the front. Lindemuth was almost thrown from the vehicle by the sudden starting of the horse, but he managed to regain hold of the reins and got the horses under control. He continued his journey homeward.

As a memento of his experience Lindemuth exhibits a hat and blackjack, which were dropped in the wagon during the struggle. He says the two men were entire strangers to him and he did not learn whether either of them were injured by their falls. He was satisfied that the shot intended for him had resulted in saving him from further trouble, and perhaps from death, and lost no time in reaching home. He is about 55 years of age. His son works the farm while he sells the products in the surrounding towns. It is believed the men had seen the farmer sell truck during the day and laid in wait for him along the highway to rob him of the proceeds.
