TALES OF OUR HEROES.

An Opportunity to Secure the Book Presented to Shenandoah People.

The Herald has succeeded in making arrangements with the publishers of the 'Hero Tales of the American Soldier and Sailor,' whereby the people of Shenandoah can secure this work at a nominal cost.

The book contains 600 pages and 100 illustrations and is finely bound in illustrated cloth. It contains all the important battles that the American soldiers and sailors have fought and graphically illustrates them.

Special attention is given to the late Spanish war, and among the illustrations are 'The Destruction of the Maine,' 'Dewey's Victory,' 'Cervera's Defeat,' 'Holtson's daring with the Merrimac,' 'The defense of Camp McCalla' and many others.

The books retail all over the country at $2.00 per copy and thousands have been sold. The terms upon which the books will be sold here are as follows: Any person who will agree to take the Herald for six months will be supplied with a copy of this excellent history of our country's defenders for 75 cents. Remember, a $2.00 book for 75 cents, the only condition being that you agree to take the Herald for six months.

The Herald is progressive, enterprising, wide-awake and always will be. Its daily visits will keep you better informed than any other paper on the news of this locality, county, state and nation. Copies of the book can be examined at the store of Hooks & Brown, No. 4 North Main street.

THE STAG PARTY.

Dr. Stein, Who Will Shortly Decounce Bachelorhood, the Host.

There was an enjoyable gathering at the Hotel Francy last night, the occasion being a stag party held in honor of Dr. W. N. Stein, who will surrender bachelorhood on the 14th inst., and marry Miss Jennie Gay, of Pottsville, daughter of Mine Inspector Samuel Gay, deceased. About fifteen of the doctor's most intimate acquaintances were in attendance.

It was ten o'clock when the guests assembled in the dining room to music rendered by two couples of soloists. The tables were draped in mourning for the occasion. A goat decorated with the stars and stripes, large bouquets on its horns and a gamecock tied upon its back served as a mascot. The supper consisted of roast turkey, roast beef, cream, strawberries and cake.

After the repeat of M. M. Burke, Esq., who was made toastmaster, addressed the guests and was followed by William Connelly, a commercial man of Philadelphia, whose humorous remarks elicited much laughter and applause for about 15 minutes. Remarks were made by other guests and vocal selections were rendered. The affair was a rousing success.

The guests in attendance were Charles Povinsky, David Owens, Martin J. Malone, P. W. Houck, James Burns, M. M. Burke, Charles Strouse, W. G. Gregory, A. D. Nimmocks, M. E. Stein, John Harris, J. Claus Brown, William Connelly, Phila., and M. J. Muldoon.

Woe in One Whole Family.

Mean Revenge Taken by a Woman Peddler of Uncertain Age.

'Is Mrs. Benton in?' inquired a good looking girl carrying a number of sofa pillows, as she knocked at the door of the top flat in the big building at Sixty-fourth street.

'Ten minutes later there was another knock on the door. This time it was the tenant from the first floor come up to ask Mrs. Benton if she could change a $5 bill.

'I've been all through the building trying to get it changed,' she said as she peeped it back in her purse. 'I wanted to buy one of your niece's sofa pillows, but I guess I'll have to wait till some other time. She said she would let me have one for 75 cents. But what's the matter, Mrs. Benton, are you ill?'

Mrs. Benton dropped into a chair and gasped: 'Buy one of my niece's pillows! I haven't got any niece. Why, did that woman have the impudence to tell you she is my niece? Why—why, she's a stranger to me and she's older than I am—I know she is. I never saw her in my life before this morning.'

'Well, she told me she was your niece,' said the first floor lady, looking somewhat frightened. 'I am sure I couldn't be mistaken. And she seemed such a sweet kind girl. Why, she even said you had raised her and taught her to make those pillows. And she said that she was selling them because times were so hard.'

But Mrs. Benton jumped up in a hurry. 'I'll go right down stairs with you and ask her what she means. She's the most outrageous person I ever heard of. The idea of my raising that old thing!'

When Mrs. Benton and her friend got down stairs, the girl held the fact that many of the tenants had bought pillows on the supposition that they were assisting Mrs. Benton as well as her niece. One of them, a Mrs. Graves, added that she didn't intend to buy until the young lady had told her what a hard time Mr. Benton was having in paying the rent, and what a failure his drug store had become, and how the young woman was going down to meet Mr. Benton with the money and give it to him because he was such a dear, kind uncle to her.

That evening after supper an indignant young couple called on everybody in the big flat building, and after protesting their ignorance of the pillow peddler left a full description of all their friends and relatives as a basis for future references.

'The idea of that hussy telling me I was her aunt!' said Mrs. Benton to her husband when they got back.

'What kills me is the cold nerve of the thing in saying I couldn't pay my rent,' said her spouse.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE ENTREE AN ECONOMY. It Dulls the Enter's Appetite For the Dinner Proper.

In the French and Italian cuisine, where economy is studied far more scientifically and thoroughly than in the English or American kitchen, the entree is not considered an extravagance. On the contrary, it is looked upon rather as an attractive economy—like soup, which dulls the enter's appetite so that he partakes less heartily of the more costly meat courses that follow.

On the continent the luncheon never begins, as with us, with the chief dish of substantiality. There is an introduction in the shape of a soup, or a dish of eggs, or of rice, or of macaroni, or something prepared in appetizing mode. Upon this the luncheon tries the first edge of his appetite, and after it fruit or resistance comes afterward.

In the same manner, as dinner, the soup is almost invariably followed by one or two entrees. In the more ambitious menus these may consist of fish or poultry, or even of meat, prepared in croquettes or rissoles, or cal au vent. If there are two entrees, the vegetable will come second. But when, as is the case at many tables, there is only one entree, this is nearly always a vegetable and is served directly after the soup.

It must be borne in mind that the old fashioned custom which prevailed so generally some years ago in America, and is still to be found in certain places, of serving a number of vegetables with the principal meat dish is not followed on the continent. In England, it is not unusual to see half a dozen dishes of vegetables appear with the roast. There they have even less idea of variety than is common with us, for precisely the same vegetables are offered day after day until one grows weary of the very sight of them.

This, of course, is not the case among those people who have made a study of dinner giving and have grafted French customs on the British stock.

On the continent, however, things are done in different fashion. At a simple dinner, containing, let us say, five courses, the first will be soup, the second a vegetable entree, the third meat of some kind, with one, or at the most two, vegetables, and one of them rarely fails to be a salad. Then comes a sweet, and after it fruit or cheese. The vegetable that appears as an entree need not of necessity be costly or unusual. Perhaps it is only a cauliflower, served with a good white sauce, or spinach, not cooked as we see it here—the stems and leaves coarsely chopped and mixed to a powder and then put through a colander, so that it is deliciously smooth and soft before it is dressed with butter or cream and surrounded with three cornered bits of toast or fried bread, or the entree may be nothing more elegant than white turnips or young carrots cut into small pieces, stewed tender and served with a cream sauce, or celery divided into three inch lengths, fried brown and seasoned with a tomato gravy. The name of the commission is legion, but they all have one point in common—that they are comparatively inexpensive.—Harpur's Bazar.
