A SERIOUS SHOOTING.

Ashland Miner Shot in a Saloon Row Sat urday Night.

Daniel Williams, a miner of Ashland, lie at the Miners' hospital at Fountain Springs, at the Miners' hospital at Fountain Springs, suffering from a gun shot wound in the abdomen. The hospital staff say the wound is probably a fatal one, as the mortality arising from such injuries run high.

Williams was shot by William Roberts, proprietor of the Klondike ealoon at Ashland, on Saturday night and the shooting was the result of a quarrel in the place. Roberts is in the Pottsville jail. He is a cripple, having lost one leg above the knee.

The prisoner alleges that about nine o'clock Saturday night Williams and another miner, both under the influence of liquor, while on their way home from work, entered the saloon and were refused drink. They became abusive and one of them struck Roberts with a miner's bottle. The men were finally persuaded to leave the saleon, but they re-mained outside only a few minutes. When they re-entered the bar room they picked up chairs and began breaking the furniture and bar fixtures. While they threw the chairs around the bar room and were smashing glassware they used the worst kind of abusive language. After some difficulty they were again hustled out into the street. Again the men returned and began to knock the bottles off the back bar and destroyed everything they could lay their hands on. Roberts said he pleaded with the men to desist and get out, but they refused to listen and he finally drew his revolver. He fired at Williams,

The latter was the favorite from the beginning and candidates for other offices, in forecasting the probable ticket, included Wadlinger for the judiciary. His head-quarters in the Metris building was the centro of attraction, and what is more to the centre of attraction, and what is more to the point, he had back of him many of the abrewdest political manipulators in the county, men who never know when they are licked, and never give up the fight until the vote is cast. The same question was submitted to the people of that town in 1897 but was overwhelmingly defeated.

The championship game between the Shemandoah team and the Browns was not played at the Trotting park yesterday, on account of the latter team falling to appear. The spectators were treated to a four-inning fame between the game between the Shemandoah and the Gilberton nines. At the fourth inning rain interfered and the game was declared off. THE CUMMINGS BOOM.

The B. W. Cummings boom for the Judgeship died in its incipiency. The fact is it was nover born outside of the brain of a Shenandoah scribe. His name was not menioned among the delegates here to-day. It is only just to Mr. Cummings to say that he was not a candidate, and never gave his con-sent to the use of his name in that connection.
