WADLINGER FOR JUDGE.

rumored he will resign the chairmanship shortly to enable him to devote his attention to the state campaign.
Charles J. Quinn, now of Scranton, was an interested onlooker. He was a strong Wadlinger advocate.
Coogan's cafe seemed to be headquarters for the Shenandoah boys. "Dick" knows how to cater to their wants.
As usual, the Butler township orators wanted the privilege of the floor on each and every occasion.
Almost every newspaper in the county, Democratic and Republican, was represented. East Eldred township cast the smallest vote and Shenandoah's First ward the largest.
P. J. Mulholland, one of the "brains" from Shenandoah and who always wielded a powerful influence in Democratic county politics, was prominent in the manipulation of the "slates." Paddy is a strong sixteen-toener.

The station house was well filled early in the evening, and the police could accommodate no more guests.
All the candidates were gunning for Shenandoah's big vote.
The chairmanship, which is usually decided upon the evening previous to the convention, was not cast in the senate. That was not considered until this morning.
Thomas E. Bell, of Shenandoah, was one of the secretaries, and he did his work well.
It is only just to the delegates to say that they conducted themselves in a gentlemanly manner. The Sunday night disturbances were caused by the hangers-on.
Chairman Moyer had the rolls almost completed by midnight, something unusual for the party.
The Judgeship fight was the centre of attraction, and it was an open and fair contest.
Late in the evening a land-office business last night and to-day.
There were no slates. This is something unusual for a Democratic gathering.
Among some of the Shenandoah delegates treachery was charged against one of the candidates from that town.
The friends of Chairman Moyer said: "Wadlinger cannot, in my opinion, be defeated. It would require a barrel of money to accomplish that with a new candidate." And Moyer was against Wadlinger.
Higgins and Nichter formed a little combination of their own.
The friends of Palmer conceded Depew's nomination early last evening.
Seats to the right and left of the stage were set apart for prominent members of the party and members of the standing committee.
Bryan's picture encased in a handsome frame and bedecked with the American colors, occupied a conspicuous position to the left of the stage.
Quite a number of prominent Republicans were noted among the interested spectators.
Westy Hogan, the irrepresentable was a delegate and a Wadlinger supporter.

A FAITHFUL DOG.

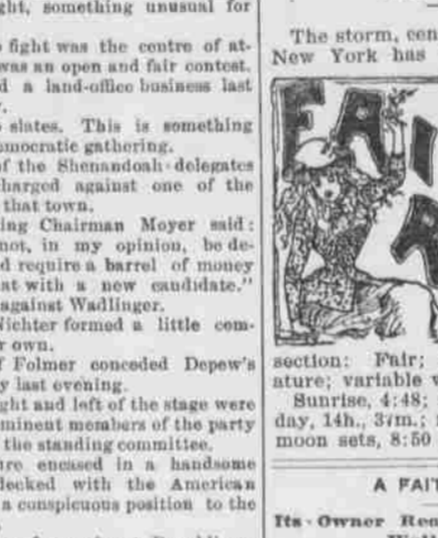

Its Owner Realized Its Worth, as Well He Might.
"Well, I wouldn't have believed it," exclaimed Jones in astonishment as he dropped in to see Smith the other evening and was met in the hall by a St. Bernard dog.
"Wouldn't have believed what?" asked Smith.
"Why, that you'd have a dog in your house," continued Jones. "It belongs to one of your neighbors, I suppose?"
"No, sir; that's my dog," replied Smith proudly.
"You don't really mean it, do you? Why, I've known you now for five years, and you've always had a marked aversion for dogs."
"Yes, I did have until lately, but I wouldn't be without one now. This brute is a noble, faithful fellow, and I wouldn't take $100 spot cash for"—
But at this juncture he was interrupted by his wife calling down over the banister: "Honey Smith, who was it that scattered those cigar ashes all over my dress?"
"It must have been the dog, my dear," was his reply.
"And who was it that dropped these apple peelings on the floor?" she demanded.
"The dog, my dear," answered Smith.
"And there's a bottle of mullage spilled on the hall carpet up here too. Is that some of your work, Henry?"
"No, my dear; the dog's to blame for that."
"And, goodness gracious," she continued angrily, "if some one hasn't been whittling up here again! How many times have I told you not to do that in the house!"
"But I had nothing to do with it, my dear. The dog's been up there probably chewing a stick."
"Well, it's a burning shame the way this house is messed up. Your collars and ties are scattered all over the rooms."
"Are they, my dear? That dog's been up there again then. Yes," continued Smith as he drove his friend into the parlor, "I'd ought to take a big pot of money for that would that dog. Why, the noble fellow saves me about 20 lawnings a week."
"So I see," chuckled Jones, "and you bet I'll have one before noon tomorrow."

Infatuated Lover's Double Crime. Allentown, Pa., July 10.—Charles A. Knaus, aged 38, shot and seriously wounded Mrs. Edwin Diefenderfer, 26 years old, Saturday midnight, then shot and instantly killed himself in Knaus' father's paint shop, to which Knaus had called Mrs. Diefenderfer. They had been intimate for two years. Mrs. Diefenderfer was trying to break up Knaus' infatuation and refused to elope with him, which made him desperate. Knaus was single. Mrs. Diefenderfer has a husband and two children, one of whom is sick with scarlet fever.
