DEATH OF INGERSOLL!

The Life of the Noted Agnostic Ended Very Suddenly.

A VICTIM OF HEART DISEASE.

He Never Fully Recovered From the Attack Which Caused His Illness at the National Republican Convention of 1895—Brief Sketch of His Career.

New York, July 22.—Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll died at his home, Winstons-on-Hudson, near Dobbs Ferry, yesterday. His death was sudden and unexpected and resulted from the heart disease from which he suffered since 1895.

For the last three days Mr. Ingersoll had not been feeling well. Thursday night he was in better health and spent a portion of the evening playing billiards with Winstons H. Brown, his son-in-law, and C. P. Farrell, his brother-in-law, and private secretary.

Yesterday morning he rose at the usual hour and joined the family at breakfast. He then said he had spent a bad night, but felt better. He did not think his condition at all dangerous.

Colonel Ingersoll spent the morning sitting in a hammock and sitting on the veranda with the members of the family. He said he was better and had no pain. At 12:30 he started to go up stairs.

On reaching the head of the stairs Colonel Ingersoll turned into his wife's room. Mrs. Ingersoll was there. Together they went to the bedroom.

These were his last words. A second after they were uttered he was dead. The only sign noticed by Mrs. Ingersoll was that the whites of his eyes suddenly showed. There was not even a sign or groan as death came. Doctors were hastily called, but their efforts were then that death had come instantly.

Colonel Ingersoll's Career. Robert G. Ingersoll was the best known because of his views on religious topics, but his introduction to the country at a large age by reason of his agnosticism and agnostic address. It was in 1876, when he made the address nominating James G. Blaine for the presidency.

Ingersoll was born in Dresden, N. Y., Aug. 11, 1838. He was the son of a Congregational minister whose liberal views antagonized the more orthodox members of his congregation.

While he was guarding a crossroad with a small detachment of men he was surprised by a party of Confederates, who captured both him and his men.

national republican convention, and his nominating speech was the sensation of that occasion.

Before the people had done talking about the "Plumed Knight" speech he made his famous "Indianapolis speech." This memorable address began: "The past rises before me like a dream."

It was not until after this speech that the world came to know of Ingersoll's views on religion. He was offered large sums by the churches to speak on any topic he chose throughout the country, and he selected the Bible as his theme.

In 1877 Ingersoll was offered the position of United States minister to Germany, but refused it, and a short time after that removed to New York, where he took up the practice of law and became one of the most successful lawyers of the metropolis.

Pottsville, July 22.—In accordance with the call issued by Elias Davis, chairman of the Republican county convention, and in compliance with the rules of the party, the Republican nominees met here this morning for the purpose of selecting a county chairman to succeed Dr. Charles Quail, of Auburn, the present incumbent.
