The middle section of the first floor is devoted to the chambers in which the ice is formed. A great tank of salted water contains 270 caus, each of which are made to hold a 390-pound cake of ice, which gives the plant a producing capacity in one installment of four and a half tens. The western end of the first floor is used for ice storage. It is interesting to note the process by which the loc is produced. Before the water taken from the main is passed into the tanks for freezing by the amonia process it is boiled twice and passes through a soke and a charcoal filter apparatus, so that it is perfectly clear and free of all germs when it passes into the sweet water tank, from which it is drawn to be transformed into ico.
