DREYFUS' TRIAL.

barrenness. His voice is not good, but it was out of practice for five years.

The first incident was the declaration of the president-colonel that he had unlimited power to call witnesses. He then ordered the bill of indictment of M. Quessay de Beaurpre to be cited. The indictment is that of 1894.

Colonel Jouanet began by saying: "It results from the documents just read that you are accused of having brought about machinations or held relations with a foreign power, or one or more of its agents, in order to procure it means, by delivering documents, indicated in the incriminating border-to, to commit hostilities or undertake war against France. I notify you that you will be allowed to state during the course of these proceedings anything that appears to you useful for your defense."

Colonel Jouanet submitted Dreyfus to a rigorous examination, more in the style of a prosecuting counsel than a judge, and made gestures of impatience at some direct denials which Dreyfus gave repeatedly to the judge's questions. The prisoner's voice resounded frequently through the court room as he energetically replied: "No, my colonel," or "Never! Never!" to questions put.

When Colonel Jouanet handed the prisoner a long slip of cardboard, upon which the bordereau was pasted, he asked: "Do you recollect this document?"

Dreyfus replied with a passionate outburst: "No, my colonel, I am innocent. I declare it here; I declared it in 1894; I am a victim." His voice here was choked with sobs, which must have stirred every spectator in court. The voice of the prisoner did not seem human. It resembled the cry of a wounded animal.

As he ended his reply, with the words: "Eleve years in the galleys, my wife! My children! My God! I am innocent; innocent," Colonel Jouanet said: "Then you deny it?"

Dreyfus replied: "Yes, my colonel." Dreyfus denied that he had ever said Alsatians were happier as Germans than as Frenchmen, declared that the bad note written about him by a "certain general" was on account of his religion, admitted relations with certain women; but asserted that he committed no indiscretion, and insisted vehemently that he had never gambled.

When Colonel Jouanet spoke of the interview with Du Paty de Clam Dreyfus replied: "I never confessed anything to Du Paty de Clam."

Here occurred one of the most dramatic scenes in the examination. Dreyfus, tremendously excited, swayed to and fro for a moment and then all his pent up emotion and indignation burst forth, and he cried in a piercing voice, heard throughout the court and even by those standing outside:

"It is iniquitous to condemn an innocent man. I never confessed anything. Never."

Dreyfus, as he uttered these words, raised his white hand and held it aloft as if appealing to Heaven to vindicate him.

The judge was fair throughout, but evidently not friendly. He showed himself, however, sensible and sober minded and impressed every one favorably. There are many persons who were present at the trial now under the impression that the harshness of the presiding judge was assumed and was intended to disarm the enemies of Dreyfus, who are only anxious to interpret ordinary courtesy into the grossest partiality toward the point.

If this be the case, and such an explanation is quite plausible, Dreyfus is naturally unaware of it, and the effect upon his highly strung nerves must be very severe.

In the course of a conversation with Maitre Demange, this correspondent remarked that Dreyfus seemed to me unresponsive and incapable of emitting a flow of feeling.

"Think," he answered, "what I or you would be if for five years out of humanity's reach, constantly under the eye of a surly jailer, and not only under his eye, but within the aim of his revolver. He was bound to silence unless given leave to speak. He was beset with enemies, was treated as the vilest of mortals, was put in irons, though docile and submissive. He almost learned to cower. He found he was losing the linear faculty, and had to speak to himself to keep it up. He is still proud, but he is cowed. I wish his pride would suffer him to collapse. If it did, he would draw tears from the most stony hearted."

Maitre Demange visited her husband yesterday afternoon and found him hopeful, although much unnerved, and especially the unfeeling demeanor displayed toward him by Colonel Jouanet, proved a tremendous strain upon him.

Unexpected Play by a Barrel. In a Drama. Many of the old time actors will remember P. G. White, who, with his wife, Emma Leland, used to star in the provinces when they were not able to get what they wanted in the cities. Well, the old gentleman was a versatile genius, and there was nothing about the house except soubrette parts that he could take. Among other things he knew how to put up a curtain, and that was more than a good many stage managers in the country was known.

We will call the place Bridgeport, for that was not the name of the town. The Emma Leland company was there for a week, and it looked like a prosperous troupe. But the first night, and right before the first and second acts of "Hiddeu Hand," something went wrong with the curtain, which stuck fast three feet from the floor. Moreover, it would not come down again, and all the company was in trouble, while the people out in front were getting more than the worth of their money without seeing the show. Mr. White was in his nether garments, having changed from a well dressed New York villain to the rough and ready countryman from old Virginia, who has come to the great city on a quest for his granddaughters and adventures. But he climbed up on a stool out there behind the curtain and did all that any honest and plain speaking man could have done in the way of making the machinery work.

And the whole curtain came tumbling down, roller and all, leaving the versatile man stranded high and dry on the top of the stool. The scene was the Bowery, and a part of the stage setting was an empty barrel. The old gentleman dropped gracefully into that barrel and rolled as gracefully off the stage. And then the patient and excellent audience waited, laughing occasionally, but not sanely, till the carpenters and sailors in the house had repaired the damage to the scene.—Chicago Post.

"Was, now, I reckon I know'd that, 'gosh," said the old man: "an' ef dried beef an' crackers hain't dry goods, then I'd like to know what in tarnation you'd call 'em?"—Chicago News.

RUMBLINGS AT SEA. A Strange Phenomenon That Savants Cannot Explain.

"Mistpoofers" (literally, "hicoughs or eruptions of the fog") is the name given by dwellers on the shores of the North sea, Europe, to a mysteriously auditory phenomenon not infrequently noticed in their vicinity, says Dr. Glanville.

Various theories have been advanced as to the origin of these sounds. Some savants have attributed them to earthquakes, but this fails to explain why they are perceived only in the daytime.

On the other hand, the fact that their time of maximum occurrence is from noon to 3 p. m., decreasing afterward until sunrise, appears to support the opinion that they are due entirely to the action of solar heat upon the water vapor of the atmosphere.

It is remarkable that when heard on land they always appear to come from far out at sea, and similarly on board ship they never seem close at hand, and they strike the ear from all sides at once. It shows, then, says the author, a mirage for the ear as well as for the eye? But, if so, how does it originate? On the Campine of Antwerp the noises were heard very distinctly—no much so, indeed, as to produce a sort of haunting effect—for several days in succession, by a party of French engineers, who at first thought that brisk artillery practice must be going on somewhere in the neighborhood.

Near Ostend the coast population is quite accustomed to the mistpoofers. They often say, "There goes the sea gun; we shall have warm weather now," or, "There will soon be a change." Sailors at sea exclaim, "The fog is breaking, under the same circumstances." The fact seems to point to a relation with atmospheric phenomena.

Bright sunshine and some degree of foginess seem to be constant factors in causing the detonations, while the sea is not a necessary element. They are most probably due to a disturbance of electric equilibrium between layers of air, the unevenly expanded by heat, under the influence of the special conditions already noted.—Popular Science.
