BLOODHOUNDS ON TRAIL.

$500 Reward Offered by the Father of the Jordan Boy.

The Scranton Truth of Monday says:

An effort to secure bloodhounds to be set on the trail of Joseph Jordan, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Jordan, of 1523 North Main avenue, who disappeared Thursday afternoon, and the offering of a reward of $500 by the worn-out father for the return of his son, dead or alive, are the developments since Saturday in this strange case. An effort is being made to secure bloodhounds at the Auburn state prison in New York.

County Detective M. A. Rafter has taken up the case and secured from Captain Robinson the services of several of the state police, who will work with Mr. Rafter in trying to locate the missing youth. This end of the state will be thoroughly searched. In following the trail of the boy the bloodhounds ought to prove of great value.

There has been no trace of the boy since he left home Thursday afternoon at 1 o'clock to collect botanical specimens except a few hours after, when he was seen going along a road leading to the West Mountain, where he told his mother he was going.

As to the theory that the boy might be held by some one, Mr. Jordan said he is not a wealthy man and there would be no temptation in his case for such a move.

Prof. M. H. Jordan, a vice-principal at the Central High school, an uncle of the missing youth, left on an early morning Lackawanna train to-day for Greene, N. Y., expecting to secure hounds at a kennel owned by a man named Finnegan who has a national reputation for handling bloodhounds. About 10 o'clock Monday morning Mr. Jordan received the disappointing telephone message from his brother that Finnegan had moved away. He then went on to Auburn to confer with the state prison officials about securing hounds if they have any.

The disappearance of the boy is as big a mystery as the day of his leaving home and his anguished parents and relatives are just clinging to the hope of news of his being found.

Not a Bad View.

The Scranton Tribune, in a recent editorial, said:

The law hangs a man not for the purpose of vengeance, but to remove from a human scene a man who has used his liberty to destroy the life of another. It assumes that a man who will take life once will do so again. The law also has another object in view, viz., to serve an impressive warning to all other evil-doers that they must stop short of crimes against life. The growing objection to punishment by death is not due to sympathy for the murderer, but rather to an increasing regard for the sacredness of human life. It is deemed proper that the law should set the example of a higher respect for the life of a human being by itself refraining from taking the life of any man. As for committing the act of death as a judgment on crime, there is no reason why the law should shrink from that except for the one reason that the law of retribution is reserved to a more competent tribunal. In the case of the hanging of a man retributory justice is given an impressive and spectacular emphasis, and the sudden death of a man at the end of a rope is more obvious and we might also say more bungling than the methods of retribution as they exhibit themselves in the slow processes of nature.

Take the Citizen. Why not.

Camp Ripley Established at Big Pond —Twenty-five in Party.

Rev. Mr. Ripley went into camp with his party of boys at Paupack Landing, Big Pond, last Monday morning. The party, with the cooks, comprises twenty-five this year, as against seventeen last year. It looks as though the enterprise was going to be a permanent thing, at least as long as the present dominie is at the head of the Methodists here. The old Landing never presented so fine an appearance as now. The boys have put two full days of work upon the grounds, removing the great rocks and loose stones and leveling up depressions until it is almost as smooth as a floor. The sleeping tents are arranged in the form of a hollow square, the north side opening to the lake, and in the center a sort of reception canopy affords shelter from sun and rain, and commands a fine view of the water. Back a short distance up the road which runs parallel with the stream flowing from the spring about half a mile above the camp, are the kitchen and mess tents. A few of the boys went up last Friday and built a large stone arch, laid in cement. Upon this the cooking is done. A fine table under the mess canopy accommodates the whole party at one sitting. Two boys rotate daily in waiting on table and helping the ladies at any necessary work in preparation of the meals. There are eight tents, all told, on the ground. The camp fires are the interesting features of the evening, being successfully with those of the Y. M. C. A. camp only about a quarter of a mile away, and sending their bright light clear across to the cottages on the north side. A baseball nine of these boys wound up a Y. M. C. A. picked club Wednesday afternoon to the tune of 2 to 1.

Every thing is going beautifully, and the boys are having the time of their lives. Camp will break next Wednesday morning. Visitors are always welcome, and especially those who have provisions to contribute. Should any friend with a soft heart toward this boy enterprise desire to help out on the provision question, let him leave bread or canned goods, or any other good thing to eat, at the store of Welsh & Ames, and the same will reach proper destination.—Hawley Times.

Gravity R. R. Cars to be Preserved.

President A. C. Snyder of the Gravity railroad men's association is actively preparing for the annual reunion at Nay Aug park which will be held this year on Saturday, Sept. 4th.

A feature of this year's meeting will be the presentation to Scranton and the locating in Nay Aug park of one of the old Pennsylvania gravity passenger and coal cars as a standing example of the difference between the days when the gravity runners were in their prime and these days of solid Pullman trains.

The passenger car is to be filled with pictures of the hands and scenes along the old route between Dunmore and Hawley. The cars will stand on some of the old track over which the same cars ran many years ago. The passenger car is now being repaired and painted at the Erie shops at Dunmore.

—Marriage licenses have been granted to Howard Lee, of Preston, and Jennie Baillard, of Preston Center; Charles Cox, of Gravity, and Hattie Wilson, of Port Jervis.
