Nickel theatres have done more to injure the saloon business in Chicago than any other factor ever did," says Edward F. Kelling, chief inspector of amusement places in Chicago. "I suppose it is the same in every other city. No one realizes this better than do the saloonkeepers, and they are almost invariably opposed to the locating of a nickel theater in their neighborhood. G. Lower, has been ill of a nervous difficulty for some years, her case baffling the skill of many noted physicians. On Tuesday at the hospital she underwent a prolonged, complicated and critical operation, performed by Dr. Richard H. Gibbons, of New York, one of the metropolis' leading surgeons. He was assisted by Drs. Brainard, Glidden and Vickers of this city. The patient was under the influence of anaesthetics for three and a half hours. While she is not yet wholly out of danger, the indications at this time are encouraging, a fact that will be received with much gratification by the community."

"Capt. Charles D. Fenton has been suffering from stomach trouble for some time and local doctors diagnosed the case as a gradual closing of the lower opening of the stomach. Saturday Dr. Richard A. Gibbons of New York, a well known surgeon, was in the city, and at the hospital performed upon Mr. Fenton a delicate and rare operation. The surgeon was assisted by Drs. Brainard, Santry, Glidden and Vickers. A new opening from the stomach in the intestines was made and Mr. Fenton has rallied from it in fine shape. While he has not yet partaken of nourishment in the shape of solid foods, light foods have been given him and the indications are that he will completely recover his former good health, which will please his many friends."

SEPTEMBER DAYS.

September has its lingering lights and lessons all along the way—it is a world of enchantment and delicate color no pen or brush can picture, while we talk encircled with harmonies, listening to small voices of unwritten song as they hum and murmur in our ears. It is a glorious season of matchless days and heavenly nights—a fitting adieu to the wealth and fullness of summer before yielding to the frosts and snows of the long and dreary winter. Wherever the eyes roam or the feet wander, there are contrasts, so vivid; and, instead of the high beauty of the flowers of the meadow, woods and roadside, is the darker, richer foliage, lit by the first slight touch of Autumn, which begins to variegate every leaf and blade, while sunshine and shadow chase each other across the dark slopes and dreamy hills, melting into the hazy blue of the farthest grand old mountains. The woods are still dimmer than before, but no less beautiful. The daisy has withered, the buttercup gone to seed, the laurel faded; but the ranks of golden rod are piled upon their stems in glory, that grow along the roads beside the stone wall. The white aster, like silver stars, and their darker sisters in lilac and royal purple, with the splendid leafage of ferns, are now beginning to bleach in the Autumn rains. The leaves rustle along the ground, the cricket chirps in the stubble, the home-staying birds flutter in the bushes, and the katydids are nightly singing of what katy did or didn't. The scent of the roses and the mown grass is no longer in the air, and the night bird sings no more in the dark wood. Who can picture the blue of the brook we look upon, or describe the color of oak, hickory or maple trees as they change and grow from crimson to gold? The fall of the leaf and changing seasons all have a meaning, and a message of significance and hope. It is the farmers' ingathering and harvest. The corn is cut and laid in shock for the later husking, the fields of buckwheat ripe for the sickle—the grapes, luscious and purple—apples and pears, red-cheeked and abundant, while the odor of elder vats is scented a long way off. We feel the charm of this soft Autumn air, and are learning that all the earth is Eden to those who will pluck the tree of knowledge and see how to use the gifts of Nature.—Storms and Signs.

BALLINGER SEES TAFT.

Says His Conference on Land Cases Will Last Two Days. Revere, Mass., Sept. 7.—Secretary Ballinger of the interior department came to Beverly armed with three portfolios filled with reports regarding the Cunningham land entry cases in Alaska, which have been the subject of serious charges preferred by Louis R. Glavis, an inspector of the field division, against higher officials of the general land offices and the interior department. Mr. Ballinger also took up with the president the controversy between the interior department and the forestry division of the department of agriculture, headed by Gifford Pinchot.

"I have three or four matters to take up with the president," said the secretary, "but it will take probably two days to dispose of them."

Mr. Ballinger could not be drawn into a discussion of the Pinchot controversy over the policy of the interior department regarding the Roosevelt conservation plans or of the Glavis charges, which involve the integrity of certain officials of the department in defending the government's interest against the patent of some 125,000 acres of valuable coal lands in the far northwestern territory.
