There will always be a demand for plays which expose immoral methods, no matter which of the ten commandments is violated. And those plays which treat of family life, will always be preferred because society rests upon the family and the home. The play of the elemental passions, love and hate and jealousy, will always appeal to men and women." At the Lyric Theatre, Monday evening, Sept. 20.

The Governor of Minnesota, Hon. John A. Johnson, contributes to The Youth's Companion of September 9th an article on "The Country Editor" which he evidently written "out of the heart." "East Lynne" Coming It is estimated that more millions of people have witnessed "East Lynne" than have seen any other play that ever was written. This remarkable truth is explainable by the fact that the attack of the play on the sensibilities is irresistible—it goes home to the heart, and more surely and truly than any other drama, it "touches the spot." An exceptional presentation of this play will be given here on Monday evening, Sept. 20th.

Invented By a Woman. The Solano targets that have been approved by the War Office were invented by a clever young Englishwoman, Miss Hubbuck. This target takes the place of the old black and white target and makes rifle practice under conditions that are said to approximate those of war. The targets are in the form of painted landscapes, and soldiers in natural colored uniforms are painted on it. This makes the scene so much more natural that the practice cannot help being more efficient.

Delay Easily Explained. When once a famous member returned to the British house of commons after a by-election for Knaresborough, his unusually delayed appearance was commented upon in the presence of Sir Wilfrid Lawson. The newly elected member, though a wealthy man, was known to be extremely careful about stray sixpences. "Isn't it odd," some one said, "Tom Collins doesn't turn up?" "Not at all, not at all," said Sir Wilfrid; "he's waiting for an excursion train."

A LETTER FROM IOWA.

Something About a Famous Telephone Case in That State.

"Out in Iowa a person may even 'cuss' into his telephone and the Supreme Court of that state has decided that the 'phone company cannot remove the instrument from his domicile on that account. Iowa evidently needs missionaries." - The Citizen, July 14th, 1909.

The writer does not call the attention of The Citizen and its many readers to the above on the editorial page of that excellent paper, because he thinks Iowa does not need missionaries, for these good men are needed in Iowa and in every state for that matter, but it may be worth while to keep history straight.

No doubt the decision referred to was made in the case, Huffman vs. Marcy Mutual Telephone Co., June 30, 1909, and reported in 121 Northwestern Reporter, 1033.

The court finds the facts that the language complained of, was used by a patron of a telephone line in a farming district, where there were six patrons, and the manager informed the offender "that such language over the line could not be tolerated, and that unless he quit disturbing the line, he would take out his telephone."

The court further finds "there was no evidence of improper language or of any disturbance" after this notice was given, and that the telephone was removed two months from the time of the notice.

The action was brought to compel the defendant company to place a telephone in plaintiff's residence, and furnish him service over its line.

The court, after stating the well known rule that telephone companies are common carriers of intelligence and news, are bound to afford equal facilities to all in like situations, and that they "must supply all alike," who are alike, and cannot discriminate against "any one," uses the following language: "No one can well defend the language employed by plaintiff. As a witness, he admitted its impropriety. And though not chargeable with all the disturbance on the line, we entertain no doubt but that both he, and one of his children at least, had abused the privilege afforded them, and so far ignored the golden rule as to have made use of the line as a vehicle of petty spite toward two of his neighbors. But it does not appear that they persisted upon being warned that such conduct would not be tolerated, nor that they were guilty of any impropriety thereafter during the two months intervening between such warning and the removal of the telephone." On the above finding of facts, the court ordered the telephone put back in plaintiff's residence.

The court in quite an extended opinion, takes occasion in language, other than above quoted to show it has no sympathy with the use of improper talk over telephone lines, and vigorously reprehends the same.

The writer does not reside in the vicinity where the controversy arose but probably the action has much of the element of "tit for tat," that unfortunately plays a part in breaking up the friendly relations that should exist among neighbors, who are associated together in a farmers' telephone company.

Too much of your space has been used in this attempt to keep history straight, and protect the good name of our Supreme Court.

The writer resides in a rich farming district of Iowa, where the highways appears at this time of the year, to be only narrow threads between the immense fields of tall corn. The farmers are already bringing into our banks large ears of dented corn as exhibits of the crop that soon will be matured. Many of them have over 100 acres of corn on each of their rolling prairie farms. They are producers surely, and have not any sympathy with those statesmen, who all the time are haranguing so loudly about the "ultimate consumer," that it would almost seem this individual belongs to one separate class, who should have the center of the stage and both sides, while in truth and fact, in the main, the consumer and producer are combined in the same person.

Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, has his home here, and is familiarly known as "Tama Jim." We all like him, and he is known among us as a combination of good sense, delightful humor and an all round brainy Scotchman.

Because our Senators, Dolliver and Cummins, failed to vote for the Payne tariff bill, for some reason, hard for the writer to comprehend, it must not be taken that the great body of Iowa Republicans are not with the party in the United States in the support of that bill. The insurgents will want to come back home pretty soon.

CURTAILING THE HUMAN MACHINE.

The great surgical experts continue to find parts of the human machine which are of no apparent use or which are indeed a clog on health. In short, it is being proved that a person may be relieved of a considerable part of his work and be all the better for it. A number of patients afflicted with chronic stomach trouble have been made well by having their stomachs taken out bodily—it being obvious that if you have no stomach you cannot have stomach trouble. The snipping off of the appendix has become so common that the operation is no longer considered fashionable—but now comes something new.

It's just this: the colon or large intestine is found to be a worse than useless part of the human anatomy; so, away with it; Metchnikoff, the great Russian bacteriologist, several years ago advanced the theory that since the large intestine is the breeding place of the majority of harmful germs in the human body, it would be a benefit to health to have this organ removed, especially as it serves no essential purpose. Dr. Distaso, the French surgeon, has been making some demonstrations on the line of Metchnikoff's theory, and as a result of systematic operations and tests at St. Mary's hospital in London he now announces it as a proved fact that the removal of the large intestine will contribute to good health and long life.

The large intestine has never stood well with the medical profession, but they have never quite known how to better the situation until the proposition came up to cut the Gordian knot by simply removing the offending member and splicing the loose ends of the alimentary canal together. Unpleasant as it may be to contemplate, it is a fact well known to investigators that the average person carries a veritable menagerie in his colon. It is safe to say that if people were to know the actual conditions present in this organ in their own case they would be so wrought up that they would have no peace until these conditions were changed. It is not necessary to go here into the many ailments which can be laid directly to the unsanitary condition of the large intestine; practically every person is more or less a victim of "auto-intoxication," or self-poisoning, due to the reabsorption into the system of the toxins present in this organ.

Dr. Distaso has been making observations on a number of persons who for a year or more have been living with their colon removed, and he finds that their health is greatly improved. He is now taking two of these subjects to Paris to be observed further at the Pasteur Institute. Every child should have its large intestine, as well as the appendix removed, he says, and he adds: "My experiments have proved we would all of us be better off without the lower intestine, which is nothing more or less than an ideal breeding place for disease germs. Almost every chronic disease may be traced back to the action of these germs—chronic heart disease, arterio sclerosis, and most kinds of headaches being examples."

To those who would avoid such an operation and still possess the maximum of health he recommends a diet which includes very little meat and an abundance of green vegetables. Eggs are as objectionable as meat, he declares, since they develop poisons in the large intestine. Tea and coffee are both bad, but an abundance of water should be drunk, he tells us.

A King's Bank. The practice of hiding money away in all manner of out-of-the-way corners is by no means modern. In the old days, according to "Gleanings After Time," secret receptacles were often made in the bedsteads, and contributed both to safety and romance.
