The patronage exceeded the supply of chicken and other edibles and there were some hungry mortals present who failed to get the innerman satisfied.

The concert given by our colored brethren from the Dreher State road help, was enjoyed very much and with their presence and help the receipts amounted to $39.66, a generous lift toward the pastor's salary. HUDSON-FULTON CELEBRATION FETES

Armada's Guns Roar Welcome to Half Moon and Clermont at New York

New York, N. Y., Sept. 30 .- Voices of thunder from the mightiest armada ever gathered within these harbor gates hailed the renewed Half Moon and her adventurous crew and acclaimed the returned Clermont, which Rev. and Mrs. H. H. Dresser, of first defied the waves by the titanic power of steam.

The two vessels, old fashioned and clumsy, were followed by such a merchant fleet as never before had been marshaled in parade in these waters, and they passed by a line of warships that told the story of the fighting strength of the navies of the world in terms of most impressive significance, Uncle Sam was here with sixteen battleships and almost forty other vessels of war, and picked ships from the fleets of England and Germany, France and Italy, Holland, Argentine and Mexico, swung on the tide in peaceful accord, to do honor to the

The great water spectacle of the morning and afternoon turned at night into such a display as threatened to blind the stars with light. The whole Hudson was a river of fire from the illumination of the battleships and other craft.

Four million people rejoiced at the official opening of this, the Hudson-Fulton celebration, which in importance has outstripped any demonstration seen in this, the metropolis of the Western world. Not even when the gallant Dewey returned from the victory of Manila Bay did New York send out a greater host than that which gathered upon the slopes of green Riverside and the lofty Palisades

The day was faultless. The sky was like an inverted turquoise cup, and the blue of it was mirrored in the stream, which shimmered beneath the sun of autumn, flecked here and there with points of foam. Perfect weather beguiled a myriad of the sons of men, who left their toil to make holiday in the names of the explorer and of the inventor whose achievements made possible the Empire City of New York.

In the manoeuvring at the start the Half Moon rammed the Clermont and took part of one of her paddle wheels by the board.

As far as the eye could reach swung the battle ships of the nations at anchor, forming in their gay dress of bunting flung jauntily from mast and yard, a line of warriors of the deep.

Submarines and torpedo boats skurried past them first as though to clear the way, and then came the images of the Half Moon and of the Clermont, followed by a flotilla which had been long in gathering. It was an impressive sight, especially to those who could for miles view the stream, although many who could only get glimpses of a part of the martial display were disappointed.

Those who were affoat felt the shock of the echoing guns of the salutes and saw all that transpired on the holystoned decks of the men-ofwar. On land the throngs saw a great procession of the vessels of peace, and so numerous were they that hours passed before the last had completed Its journey up the stream, and many did not attempt to get in line again for the display of the evening.

An idea of the magnitude of the parade may be had when it is known that the column that circled the battle hips and cruisers of the international fleet in the Hudson least forty miles long. The distance from the Statute of Liberty the anchorage of the derelict destroyer Seneca is about sixteen miles, yet when the flagship General Meigs, that headed the column arrived off the Battery on her return to the starting point the vacht division in the parade was just gesting under way, and there was an urtroken chain of vessels of every description, except warships creen liners, going up or coming down the river behind her

54 FLOATS IN BIG HISTORICAL PARADE

Magnificent Spectacle, with 20,-000 Marchers, at Hudson-Fulton Celebration

NEW YORK'S PAST IN TABLEAUX

Floats Moved in Four Divisions-Dra-.matic incidents of Indian, Dutch, Colonial and Modern Periods Portrayed-Review in Court of Honor.

New York, N. Y., Sept. 30 .- Three centuries of history passed in review through New York streets, displaying in monster panorama the story of the city from the days of the red man to the twentieth century present.

The historical pageant, first of the three great land parades that mark the Rudson-Fulton celebration, differed from any parade which the city has known heretofore in its living tableaux that were presented before the eyes of hundreds of thousands of persons.

Starting at one o'clock from Central Park West and 110th street, the procession of floats, attended by an army of fifteen thousand marchers in costume, moved down the boulevard to Fifty-ninth street, thence to Fifth avenue and down to Washington square. There were fifty-four floats in the column.

Governor Hughes and official guests of the Hudson-Fulton Commission, including the special delegates from various nations, reviewed the pageant at the Court of Honor, in Fifth avenue, between Fortieth and Forty-second streets. Major General Charles F. Roe, grand marshal, and his staff. reviewed the column just north of Washington square. At the head of line rode Mayor McClellan and Herman Ridder, chairman of the Parade Committee.

The floats, arranged in chronologi cal sequence, passed in four divisions, illustrating the Indian, Dutch, Colonial and modern periods. They portrayed the scenes that existed when Hudson came to America's shores, the momentous events that closely followed his voyage, the city as the Dutch knew it, the capture of New Due from State Bauks and Bank-ers.

Due from approved reserve York by the British, the life that was lived under British control, the stirring incidents of the Revolutionary War, the period of Robert Pulton and his "folly" and some of the milestones that typify progress of te-day.

Preceded by heralds, the first float, title car of the Empire State, typifed New York from the day of the bark cance to the present day of the non-canoe to the present day of the monster Lusitania, from the period of the wigwam to the present day of the skyscraper. The following floats of the first division showed the formation of the Indian confederacy, real Iroqueis Indians having posts in the moving tableaux.

The second divison illustrated Hudson's discovery, his fate in later years at the hards of a nutinous crew, the

the third division, portrayed the stirring deeds of Washington, of Nathan Hale, the publication of the constitution and the inauguration of the first President of the United States. fourth division showed Robert Fulton mestering the problem of steam navigation, the old boats that plied the Erie Canal, the old sleigh that formerly furnished winter transportation in Broadway, the "old masheen" of fire fighters of early years, Garibaldi's home on Staten Island and the introduction of Croton water in New York. concluding with a monster figure of Father Knickerbocker receiving the millions of visitors to the present sig celebration. The Garibaldi float was manned by ten Italians who were in actual service under that famous commander.

All these floats were manned and escorted by delegations from various patriotic, civic and political organizations, ranging from the Sons of the Revolution to the present day "Indians" of Tammany Hall. The historical characters represented on the floats were carefully selected and drilled in a special school of instruction. Special dressing rooms were provided the tableaux artists near the start of the parade. The floats themselves were designed with great care, and the trucks carrying them were especially built for the service. They were drawn by four horses each, the horses brightly caparisoned and with uniformed attendants at the reins. Each float had an escort of one or more marching organizations, the whole number attached to the escorts coming to about 20,000.

Commissioner Baker had 6,000 policemen in readiness at 8 o'clock to line up along the five-mile route of march over which the procession moved, shortly after noon. There were forty policemen on every block along which the pageant passed. No such display of authority has ever been made in connection with a simior domonstration in this elter
