WAYNE COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS MEET

Enthusiastic Gathering of Christian Workers at Bethany.

The annual convention of the Wayne County Sunday School Association met at Bethany on Friday, in the Presbyterian church. This edifice is the oldest house of worship standing in the county. Work on construction commenced in 1822, and it was not completed until 1835. The church cost $5,000. A number of ministers labored in this church until Rev. E. O. Ward was called to the pastorate in 1853, and continued in the field until compelled to discontinue on account of age. Rev. J. B. Cody is now pastor of the Bethany church.

The first Sunday schools in this county were organized in 1818. There were three schools organized that year at Bethany, Canaan and Salem. An interesting incident of the Canaan school is that Abigail Frisbie recited 3,062 verses on eight Sundays, for which she received a Bible and hymn book. The Bethany Sunday school was organized July 19, 1818, in the court house at that place, with six teachers, 30 scholars, and V. M. Dibol as superintendent. This school organized as an association in 1819 for the opening of schools elsewhere and through the work of this organization Sunday schools were started in other parts of the county. Rev. E. O. Ward superintended this school for more than 30 years and it is still in existence. There was a Sunday school union movement in the county about 1830, but the greatest organized Sunday school movement in Wayne county was in 1871, when the Wayne County Sabbath School Association was organized in the Presbyterian church at Honesdale.

The convention proper opened at 10:30 a. m. with devotions led by Rev. W. B. Signor, pastor of the Bethany Methodist church. Rev. J. B. Cody, pastor of the Presbyterian church in which the convention was held, gave the "Welcome to Bethany" address. R. M. Stocker, Esq., of Honesdale, Wayne county's historian, then gave a most interesting talk upon "Bethany, the First Home of Sabbath Schools in This Section." The next half hour was spent in receiving reports from the different departments upon the following subjects and offered by the following persons:

"Teaching Training," Rev. A. L. Whittaker, rector of Grace Episcopal church. Several good points were brought out. "Adult Bible Class," J. A. Bodie. Mr. Bodie's report was extremely interesting. "Home Department," Miss Grace Hall. She gave a number of sound facts that furnished thought for reflection. Miss Caroline A. Kallsch, who presented "Primary Department and Cradle Roll," thoroughly understood her subject and offered a number of suggestions that are helpful to teachers of the primary department.

The address of the morning was given by Mrs. M. J. Baldwin, a field-worker. She gave an interesting half-hour talk upon "Self Training of the Elementary Teacher." The speaker is an enthusiastic Sunday school worker and her address was highly appreciated.

The afternoon exercises were opened at 2 o'clock by a song and praise meeting conducted by Miss Cody. At 2:15 W. D. Reed of the Pennsylvania State field, spoke upon "Practical Methods in the Modern Sunday School." At 2:45 J. A. Brown of Honesdale, spoke upon "How to Keep Our Young People Interested in the Sunday School." This was followed by an address on "Our New Graded Lessons," by Mrs. M. J. Baldwin. At 3:30 Rev. A. L. Whittaker spoke on "Open Conference," Rev. W. H. Hiller on "The Sunday School vs. The Saloon," and Rev. W. S. Peterson on "The Sunday Schools in Mission Fields."

The evening session convened at 7:30, after a session of song and praise, led by Miss Cody. Rev. G. S. Wendell spoke on "The Teacher in Training," who was followed by W. D. Reel whose subject was "Round Table Conference." After report of committees the following officers were elected: Andrew Thompson, President; William J. Ward, Vice President; C. R. Callaway, secretary; M. E. Simons, treasurer, and Rev. J. B. Cody, district superintendent.

WHITNEY SUSTAINS COOK. Tells How They Had to Subdue Boatswain and That Doctor Told of Pole.

Boston, Oct. 2.—Threats of death and frozen bickerings at Etah on the frozen shores of North Greenland attended the arrival at the Peary camp there of Dr. Frederick A. Cook. On one occasion, when appealing to Boatswain John Murphy, of the Roosevelt, to extend the courtesies of the camp to the wasted and half-famished explorer Cook, Harry Whitney, the young New Haven sportsman, who came here from fourteen months in the Arctic Circle, was threatened with an axe by Murphy and had to threaten Murphy in turn with a shotgun before the fiery boatswain's temper cooled.

This and other quarrels with Murphy at Etah are the secrets that Whitney has so closely guarded and concerning which he refuses to utter a syllable. To friends who came down from St. John's, N. F., with him after he left the Jeanie on Tuesday he unbosomed himself. He told them of many months of bickerings and quarrels with Murphy; of Murphy's bulldozing and bullying methods, and of the final quarrel over Cook's stores and the Peary provisions at Etah, in which the boatswain flared up with savage fury and raised an axe to attack him.

The cabin boy, Pritchard, it seems, was on Whitney's side in this quarrel and seized a gun, as did Whitney.

Murphy is a gangling, raw-boned Newfoundlander who can neither read nor write; a man of volcanic temper and an arm of steel. Futtile rumors of an unpleasantness at Etah between Murphy and Whitney have been simmering since the inception of the Cook controversy. Whitney has frankly told the few friends he met since his return to civilization that he was forced to leave the Peary camp and go and live among the Esquimaux.

Having been placed in charge of the Peary stores at Etah, and at the same time having been instructed by Peary to likewise exercise a supervision over the Cook stores there, Murphy took his responsibilities tremendously to heart in a purely primeval way.

And strange as it may seem, it was to a man of this calibre, a man of dense ignorance, that Peary left written instructions concerning what should be done with Cook's and his own stores.

When Murphy had finally been cowed by Whitney and his plucky little champion Pritchard Cook was naturally deeply indebted to them for their services on his behalf. So it came about that he told Whitney and Pritchard about having been to the North Pole, whereas he had not a word to say on the subject to the bullying boatswain. Little Pritchard kept the secret locked in his bosom until it was drawn from him by interviewers at Battle Harbor.

"I admire Peary immensely," said Whitney to-day, "and believe he should receive the applause of the world for the great work he has done; I also admire Cook for his wonderful achievement, believing firmly that the story he tells about being to the Pole is true."
