Damage to Potato Foliage.

"Will you please write me what is the matter with the enclosed potato leaves and send me a cure for the same?"

Thus wrote a man of Marietta, Pa., to which State Zoologist Surface replied as follows:

"The potato leaves that you sent to us show the chief injury to be the flea beetles, and, next, what is known as the early blight. The preventive would have been to have sprayed with Bordeaux mixture and arsenate of lead. Even yet it is not too late to prevent further damage from these causes. Use three pounds of bluestone and four pounds of lime in 50 gallons of water, and to this add from two to three pounds of arsenate of lead or one-half pound of Paris green. Spray thoroughly and whenever it washes off by hard rain, or once every two or three weeks. If the arsenate of lead is used it need be repeated as often as in using Paris green. This will also poison the leaves so that the potato beetle will not attack them."

LESSON FOR BOYS FROM FIGHT.

The story of the Jeffries-Johnson fight is a great one for the American boy. And don't you forget it that every American boy—not the mollycoddle, of course—read that graphic story, chronicled in every sheet in the land, bulletined at every telegraph and newspaper office and narrated at every fireside.

Now there is agitation against the moving pictures, but it will not be a harm for every American boy in the land to see the moving pictures of that great battle if he reads the lesson in them right. That lesson, as we see it, is of great importance to every boy of strength of character, mind and soul.

Jeffries was a magnificent brute. Doctors who examined him declared, and still stick to their statement, that they never saw so perfect a man. He himself declared that he never felt better or stronger or more capable of greater endurance. He was physically capable of any undertaking. But—

He was not mentally strong. He allowed a race prejudice to work himself into a frenzy that knew no reason and made him as low as the carnivorous brute. That's pretty hard on the idol for a year of the American people! But isn't it so?

He got grouchy and gloomy and downright ugly to his advisers. He wanted no advice. His own thoughts fought him to a finish before the fight began. He was licked before he entered the ring. He had worked himself up to such a pitch that he was a victim of mental torture. Worry wrecks.

His power of mind failed him. Dark clouds passed over his brain and that magnificent tower of human strength, 220 pounds of perfect development, swung a pair of fists wildly and wobbled and floundered because it was without a pilot to steer it in the right direction.

Mental poise and calmness and good steady habits always are good training for a pugilist. They are the only thing for the American boy.—Editorial in Allentown Morning Call.

Price, Who Said He Wouldn't Run, Keeps His Word.

Attorney S. B. Price of Scranton in a letter to the secretary of the Democratic state committee has formally refused to accept the nomination for lieutenant-governor tendered at the Allentown convention. The resignation will be acted on at a meeting of the committee July 20 at the capitol.

Mr. Price to comply with the law has also filed his expense account at Harrisburg. It shows he spent less than $50, in fact, spent nothing, to be named one of the Democratic nominees. He stated positively the day of the convention that he would not be a candidate and he has not changed his mind since.

All the Republican state candidates have filed accounts, in which they each say their expense did not exceed $50. Mr. Price is the only Democrat to file an account.

ACTRESSES OF TODAY.

Elsie Ferguson's name is upon the lips of every stage-struck girl these midsummer days, and her story, as told in Human Life for July, is one of the most interesting that has appeared in the series entitled "Actresses of Today."

Of all the apparently sudden rises to fame, hers was the most spectacular. We say apparently, because rises on any plane of life are never really sudden. The public knows nothing of the years of preparation. They see only the finish of the rise.

All this is made very clear in the compelling story of Miss Ferguson's life, starting with the time when, at her father's death, she found herself without money or influential friends and obliged to face this much-abused old world and earn its buffets or rewards. Her family, in solemn conclave, decided that she should become a school-ma'am. So they bundled her off to a normal school. But right here Fate gave a new shuffle to the cards and dealt the little embryo star, whose whole soul even then was wrapped up in the mimic world behind the footlights, a trump hand. What followed was all very unusual and romantic, and seems to dovetail fittingly into the kaleidoscopic changes of her professional life.

Miss Ferguson's philosophy of clothes is so simple and so practical as to fit perfectly the needs of the everyday women, even though stars are supposed to be garbed far above the heights to which ordinary mortals may aspire.

A Remarkable Spring.

One of the most remarkable springs in the world, says J. A. Eddy, in the Engineering and Mining Journal, has recently been discovered in New Mexico. It is literally a spring saturated with sodium sulphate. Distilled water weighs 8 1/3 pounds per gallon; the water of this spring weighs 10 2/3 pounds. The temperature of the spring is a little over 110 degrees Fahrenheit. As the saturated liquid overflows and cools, it forms a crystalline mass like ice, which, in the course of ages, has spread into a snow-white bed of solid sodium salts, miles in extent, and as level as a lake. The warm brine, Mr. Eddy reports, is inhabited by a minute shrimp-like organism, and a species of plant is found growing in the dry expanse of sodium sulphate.

A Wonderful Eye.

Recent studies of the skulls of the morosaurus, the diplodocus, and other species of the extinct gigantic animals called the saurpoda, have brought out the fact that in several of these creatures, although perhaps not in all species, there existed on the top of the skull a well-defined tubular opening, smoothly lined with bone, and leading directly down into the cerebral cavity. Professor Osborn regards it as probable that in this opening was lodged a large pineal, that is, cone-shaped, eye, an organ the existence of which was left problematical by the researches of the late Professor Marsh. In a recently restored skull of the morosaurus the orbits are of enormous size.

"Tandem Polygamy."

"Tandem Polygamy," the term used by the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst in referring to some of our prominent society women, is apt enough to find a place in the language; but a scientific man, with an eye to accuracy, would prefer to call it "progressive polyandry," although "progressive polyandry" would drive the average man to the dictionary, if it did not drive him to drink.

Polyandry is still practised by tribes in Thibet, parts of India and the Pacific Islands. It is a style of marriage which may be useful in communities where there is a surplus of men; in other words, in this form of marriage each woman has several husbands.

What becomes of the mothers-in-law under this arrangement is not clear, but many primitive tribes retain the mother-in-law taboo, which absolutely forbids, under many and dire penalties, the wife or husband to speak to or even to look at the mother-in-law.

This old-time practise is still followed rigidly by the Navajo Indians. In Arizona, who are polygamists. Some arrangement of the kind seems to be regarded as necessary by primitive peoples.

Some Bride.

The bride is no doubt the most popular young lady that this city possessed and ever will have the honor of possessing. She is a very amiable young lady possessing many traits of sterling quality and character, which made her a very charming bride. Her friends are numbered by the many, not only here, but all over Southern Illinois, who laud this young lady in the very highest manner possible. Words cannot speak too highly for this estimable, happy bride. Their romance started when the happy bride was employed as teacher in the public school in the city of Boston and soon friendship ripened to love and through ardent attention he won for himself the most charming bride Du Quoin has offered in many a year which no doubt the happy groom justly deserves.—Du Quoin (Ill.) Call.

Growth in the Levant.

After centuries the Near East is in the world's race for growth and progress. Port Said, fifty years ago a small Arab camp, now has a population of 50,000. From one hut in 1830 Piraeus has grown to 80,000. Mer sine, not in existence when Ibrahim Pasha anchored his fleet where it now stands, has 22,000; Beirut has multiplied 6,000 inhabitants into 150,000. Gaza increased from 2,000 in 1840, with virtually no growth till 1887, to 48,000.
