

FIND HIDDEN HEAL

Reported Discovery of Crippen Missing Link.

POLICE SILENT AS TO STORY.

While Dr. Crippen Will Not Resist Extradition, It Is Understood Suspect In London Murder Mystery Will Be Deported.

London, Aug. 2.—When the Belle Elmore (Mrs. H. H. Crippen) inquest resumed on Aug. 15, it is now said the charge against Dr. Crippen of murdering an unknown woman will be changed to one more specific. One startling report, which the police refused to affirm or deny, was to the effect that the missing head of the victim had been found.

Crippen Will Not Resist. Quebec, Aug. 2.—Although Dr. Hawley Harvey Crippen, chief figure in the Belle Elmore murder mystery, will not resist extradition, it is probable that the suspected London murderer will be sent back to England by the quick process of deportation.

While there is an impression that Dr. Crippen is overwhelmed by despair owing to the certainty that his companion in flight, Miss Ethel Leneve has confessed to enough concerning the doctor's dark secret to fasten the hangman's halter about his neck, there is also an uneasy suspicion that Dr. Crippen craftily understands the chief obstacle in the way of successful prosecution and clings to the hope that through the failure of the police to identify the body found in his cellar he may at least escape execution.

There is wide difference of opinion as to the strength of the circumstantial evidence against the accused man. In some quarters it is believed that enough is already known to send Crippen to the gallows. But there is a counter belief that there is yet much to be done before the case against the man will be strong enough for an English judge to sentence him to death.

There is great curiosity as to what Miss Leneve has told the police. That she has made some sort of confession there is no doubt, it is said.

The little Frenchwoman, no longer in her ill fitting boy's suit, presents a very pretty and very pathetic figure in the Quebec jail.

Dr. Crippen aged five years in appearance when he had been twice mobbed by a crowd around the palace of justice, had been judiciously informed that he would be deported to London in fifteen days to answer to a charge of murder and had been identified by Mme. Ginnette, the Roselli (N. J.) woman and former friend of Belle Elmore in England, who was so instrumental in causing Crippen's capture.

So many happenings descended upon Crippen in the few minutes that he was the color of a corpse when pushed into a carriage and driven back to his cell in the provincial prison.

Ethel Leneve was not arraigned with Crippen, and in that omission lies the germ of a mystery.

Unofficial police circles have it that the Leneve woman has broken down and is in a hospital. Other sources of information affirm that she has agreed with Inspector Dew to turn king's evidence and for that reason will not be arraigned until later, so that she and Crippen may be sent back to London on different ships.

After the court proceedings Crippen was taken into the office of the high constable, where he was suddenly confronted with Mme. Ginnette. The sight of the woman caused Crippen to shrink into his clothes, but he said nothing when she called him Crippen.

This is a quiet city, but there was almost a riot outside the palace of justice when a crowd of 1,000 people tried to get a view of Crippen as he left the building. A carriage was half overturned, several women were knocked down and only the mass of the crowd prevented an accident of moment, for there was no police protection of any kind.

Crippen is a shriveled little old man. He has a growth of sandy beard on his face, his thin hair is ragged on the edges, his cheeks have fallen in and his eyes carry the look of a hunted man.

Etiquette and Danger. "Ezra," said the farmer's wife, "I wish you wouldn't lean your elbows on th' table."

"Huh," sneered the farmer, "gettin' fastidious, ain't you? Mebby you'll be warnin' me next to keep my knife outen my mouth an' tellin' me not to cool my toes in my sasser. But my granther kep' his elbows on th' table, an' so did my father, an', by heck, I'm goin' to lean on it as hard an' as long as I dun please, so there!"

Whereupon he leaned hard, so hard that the ancient table suddenly collapsed and sprawled out its legs and went down with a frightful crash of crockery.

"Well, you've gone an' done it now!" screamed the old lady. "That's a pretty mess, ain't it? Ef you'd had th' sense of a chipmunk you'd have knowed th' reason I didn't want you to lean on th' table wuz 'cause th' legs wuz rickety. An' I guess a little etiquette wouldn't hurt you none anyway, Ezra Doolittle, to say nothin' of savin' $2 wuth of family crockery."

And the disgusted farmer stumbled out from the scene of wreckage and chased a harmless tramp three miles down the road with an ax handle.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Handicapped. Englishmen use their hands comparatively little in conversation, but Frenchmen use them a good deal. Quantitatively, Parisians have a very keen sense of the exaggerated way in which the southern Frenchman and the Italian help on what they have to say with their hands, and this accounts for the following story:

An Italian railway thief was caught redhanded in the train, handcuffed and brought to Paris. As he was walking out of the Gare de Lyon between two detectives a friend met him.

"Hello!" he said. "Where have you been this long time, and how are you?" The prisoner looked at him pathetically and shook his head.

"What's the matter?" said his friend. "Have you been stricken dumb?" The prisoner raised his handcuffed hands. "Very nearly," he said.—London M. A. P.

Room and Board For Single Gentleman. "So, Belinda, I hear you and 'Doc' have parted company. Couldn't you get along?"

"No'm; least I couldn't. D'y'e know that low down nigger just ma'ed me fo' my money?"

"No?" I said.

"Yas'm. He saw all them things in my parlor, hisser butter dishes and crayon portraits that you and the other white ladies ef' me, and he just thought he was goin' to set in there and smoke while I washed and f'ined. And I had a big burial insurance, too, and he knowed that. So I jes' natchally tu'ed him out."

"Yes," I said. "But I thought I saw him goin' in your back gate last week."

"Oh, to be sure! He's round, but he's jes' boad'in' with me now."—Ladies' Home Journal.

The Common Complaint. Probably this expression is used oftener by people than any other: "Everything is blamed on me."—Aitchison Globe.

Dynamite Outrages Charged Against Striker. Explosives Are Freely Used.

Honduras Government Gives Arms to Bonilla's Men. 3,000 IN REVOLUTIONARY ARMY

One Hundred American Gunners Enlist Under Banner of Former President, Who Heads Uprising. Army of 3,000 Marching.

Greensburg, Pa., Aug. 2.—The strike situation in the Westmoreland-Indiana coal field has grown more acute. There has been a free use of both dynamite and nitroglycerine. For this the striking miners and their friends are blamed. It is claimed that conditions indicate that the strikers have become more desperate than miners east of the Rocky mountains ever were before.

The home of Andy Koski, a non-union man near Latrobe, was blown up yesterday by dynamite. Koski and his family were thrown from their beds and injured. Koski had refused to join the strikers. It has been discovered that beer kegs when placed in the roadway in front of autoists are dangerous. Nitroglycerine has been poured into kegs at different points and the kegs placed in the path of autos occupied by the state constabulary. The troopers making the trip from Greensburg to Export, the scene of much trouble, found a beer keg lying innocently in the middle of a narrow road in the path of the auto. This was rolled off to the side and the auto, in returning an hour later, found the same keg again in place. This excited suspicion and the keg was lifted carefully into the auto and brought to Greensburg, where it was examined and found to contain enough nitroglycerine to cause a destructive explosion.

FOR THE FLOWER LOVER.

Some Ways of the Popular Nasturtium.

THE CLIMBING NASTURTIUM.

No garden, at least of the old-fashioned sort, is complete without its bed of cheery nasturtiums. Not only are these flowers grown for their bright, showy blossoms, but also for their peppery leaves, which may be used like cress for salads and sandwiches. The pods and seed are used for pickle, and the tubers of many species are edible.

Both tall and dwarf nasturtiums should be grown in warm, sunny places. They require a fairly moist situation. If very early effects are desired the seed should be sown indoors in boxes and the young plant set out when all danger of frost is over. For ordinary beds the seeds are sown in the place where they are to grow, and a few weeks after they are sown blossoms are produced, which continue until a hard frost comes. There is an endless profusion of blooms.

The common varieties may be classed in two groups, the dwarf or bedding varieties and the tall or climbing kind. The dwarf sort are very compact, forming small, dense bushes which are fairly hidden by flowers of all shades of red and yellow. The climbing varieties (Tropaeolum majus) are luxuriant climbers for verandas and trellises. They are very useful in covering unsightly fences or to trail over ugly ground or for covering walls and banks.

Children's Frocks. Children's frocks this season are particularly pretty, and the little French costume seen in the illustration, made of embroidered founcing, is no exception to this rule. A deep founcing is used with an open conventional pattern. One founce makes the short skirt, and another founce of the same depth forms the low necked bodice. The waist drapery is edged with a narrow frill of valenciennes lace. At the side of the decolletage is a long looped bow of pink satin ribbon. A wider ribbon of the same color makes the sash, which is tied in a bow with ends reaching to the bottom of the skirt, and short loops at the waist line. When the long sash is not desired a pretty girldle with rosettes fastening may be substituted, and a rosette may take the place of the loops on the bodice.

To Keep Tiles Polished. When glazed tiles become discolored or spotted they should be rubbed with a cloth moistened with lemon juice, left for a quarter of an hour and polished with a soft cloth.

Tiles should never be washed in the ordinary way, but rubbed with a damp cloth and then polished with skim-milk and water. A rag just moistened with paraffin also gives a brilliant polish, but the tiles should be well rubbed with a clean soft cloth after.

Remember that paraffin is very inflammable and must not be used near a light or fire.

Cleaning a Chair. An upholstered chair can be cleaned of a great amount of dust if an old towel is dampened and placed over the upholstered part and then beaten with a rattan carpet beater. As the towel collects the dust it should be rinsed clean and the process repeated. This is a method of dusting a chair when there is no yard for one to take the furniture into, and it is done to keep the dust from flying over the room, settling on other pieces.

Supporting Power of Air. Mr. F. Ferber presented before the Academy of Sciences in Paris recently a paper on the question of the proper allowance to be made for the resistance of the air to aeroplanes, and he showed that hitherto the experimental determination of this resistance has given figures much too low. Without offering a definite estimate of the coefficient of resistance, Mr. Ferber proved that, in any event, the air is capable of offering much greater support than has been taken into account by those who have attacked theoretically the problem of aerial flight.

HOW TO CURE A TERRIFIC HEADACHE.

Many people suffer with an aching head week after week, occasionally getting relief from so-called headache powders and nerve-stupefying drugs. They never get cured because they start wrong. Such people should do a little commonsense thinking. Headache is simply the result, a warning signal, of a far more serious trouble. Usually it means bad blood poisoned by an inactive or sluggish liver. Headache sufferers are often nervous, cross and irritable. Their sleep is disturbed and digestion impaired. The liver doesn't do its work right, and the bile elements poison both nerve and brain.

Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills remove the cause of headache. They are Nature's true laxative, and give tone to liver activity, are a positive specific for biliousness and a torpid liver. Get your liver right by using Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills and your head won't ache, your nerves won't weaken, nor your food distress you. Physicians use and recommend. They form no habit. You should always keep them on hand. These little Vegetable Pills will ward off many ills.
