In Pennsylvania it is quite abundant throughout the eastern counties, but in the central and western porlacking or but sparingly distributed. It is not unlikely that it may have already nearly reached the limit of its extension.

However, that may be, it is well worth the attention of all who have chestnut trees or timber. AMUSEMENTS.

"The Lottery Man."

What may be characterized as a mild form of slavery is the theme employed by Rida Johnson Young in her latest comedy, "The Lottery Man," which the Shuberts will present at the Lyric Thursday evening after the long engagement of the play at the Bljou theatre, New York. The chief character in the play is Jack Wright, a reporter on a New York paper which is owned by "Foxey" Peyton. Wright and Pey-ton are great friends, despite the wealth of the latter and the most ordinary means of the other.

The reporter gets a Wall street tip and goes to his chief for money with which to back his belief, givng Peyton his promise that if lunge falls, he will reimburse him by bringing in the biggest newspa-per "beat" New York lins known for years. The tip proves a failure. and in order to make good to his paper, he proposes a lottery with himself as the prize.

The paper at once begins publi-cation of coupons which are sold to women in general, the idea being that the holder of the lucky number will draw Jack, the reporter as her husband. After the scheme has been launched, however, Jack falls desperately in love with Helene Heyer, which causes him to pour curses upon himself that he had not met her before he decided to sacrifice himself upon the altar of the lottery scheme.

The lucky number goes to the maidenly companion (Miss Lizzle) of Mrs. "Foxey" Peyton. Meantime all the friends of Jack and Helene knowing their fondness for each have been turning Heaven and earth to purchase as many coupons as possible. The complications which follow are said to be most amusing and novel.
