AMUSEMENTS.

"THE NIGGER."

A Wonderful Play Coming to the Maple City. Some of the most effective and dramatic incidents on the stage are those that are heard rather than seen. Sardou, in the days when he was turning out "Fedoras" and "La Tosca's" with tireless energy, fully grasped the peculiar psychology of a public that thrilled and awed by the sounds of torture and suffering in the wings, when the same scene, openly depicted before the eyes of an audience would probably have created derision. Other French playwrights have successfully utilized the same power of appealing to the hearing instead of the sight to secure their most startling and dramatic effects. This method had not had a great vogue among the American playwrights, although it has been customary except in a few notable melodramatic instances, to have one or more of the characters in a play describe off-stage boat races and horse-racing contests for the benefit of the audience. And sometimes this method had been very successful.

Edward Sheldon, the author of "The Nigger," the remarkable race-problem play, which will be presented at the Lyric, Friday, Nov. 25, has apparently reverted to the Sardou method to secure some of his most thrilling effects. The first act of "The Nigger" has a sensational lynching episode; but very few members of the mob are seen, and the lynching is largely an appeal to the imagination. Nevertheless it is a tremendously thrilling and dramatic incident. The cries of the pursuing mob; the baying of the bloodhounds, the sounds of the man-hunters in the bush—all re-enforced by an actual glimpse of the hunted negro in his efforts to escape are thrilling in the extreme.

Later the negro is delivered over to the leaders of the mob; but the lynching that follows is only suggested. The audience realizes, however, that the culprit is really being lynched, and this imaginary fact makes a deep and lasting impression.
