An anecdote of John Esten Cooke of the Confederate army, setting forth the manner in which he was made a major, is typical of Mr. Eggleston's style, running as follows:

On Stuart's staff he (Cooke) distinguished himself by a certain laughing nonchalance under fire and by his eager readiness to undertake Stuart's most perllous missions. It was in recognition of some specially daring service of that kind that Stuart gave him his promotion, and Cooke used to tell with delight of the way in which the great boylsh cavaller

"Yes, I am," answered Cooke.
"Let's see if you are," said Stuart, taking off his coat as if stripping for a boxing match. "Try that on."

Cooke donned the coat with its three stars on the collar and found it a fit.
"Cut off two of the stare," commanded Stuart, "and wear the coat to Richmond. Tell the people in the war department to make you a major and send you back to me in a hurry. I'll need you tomorrow."

In "The Doctor's Christmas Eve" James Lane Allen is said to have written a work worthy of standing beside "The Choir Invisible" in his famous series of Kentucky stories. The characters are much the same as are met in "The Bride of the Mistletoe," but the story is rated as being much finer in caliber. It is told in a series of word pictures rather than the usual narrative and dialogue, but loses nothing by this handling. The story volves around the JAMES LANE ALLES. love of Dr. Birney, the faithful country physician, for Mrs. Ousley, "the bride of the mistletoe" and wife of his lifelong friend, and the effect it has on the children of the two families. There are no villains in the story, but there is the desolate home of the unloved wife. The doctor's struggle is the mainspring naturally, but the dramatic features are furnished largely by the half grown children, especially in the case of the doctor's little son, who, gradually perceiving the true state of affairs and siding with his father, brings affairs to a climax with one of those terrible remarks that only a child utters.

SUGAR MAKES YOU GROW.

Americans and Britons Increasing in Height and Weight.

English and American girls just reaching womanhood, and the next generation in its early teens, are unusually tall, standing a head or more above their mothers. This has teen remarked on over and over again, and has been the subject of learned disquisitions. Yet no genently accepted cause for the fact has Now comes a London physician of note and says hat it is simply a once of leng hened sweetness. sweetness" in this particular case the nature of the young ladies is not referred to, but their diet. It may interest some of your Cettle readers to know that certainly one Irishman accompanied Columbus on his voyage of discovery. He is so ubiquitous it is not surprising that he should be found in any country or in any climate.

In a "list of the persons who were left by Columbus on the Spanish is land (Santo Domingo) and found killed by the Indians when he re-turned to settle it in the year 1493" (Navarrete) we find the name of Guillermo Ires; natural de Cainey, en Irlanda."
