SIX YEARS TO FINISH.

It will take five or six years to finish it. The power is to be used for any one who wants to use it. When it is once finished, Hawley will be able to use the electric power, and draw more manufacturers here.

Quite a number of families will be affected. At Tafton recently the hotel property was sold for $9,000.

The silk mill which is run at present by water power, has always been able to run even in dry time, by storing a little water at Wilsonville. They get 385 feet fall in a mile in the dam they are going to build. They have a method by which they use the water over and over.

Wilsonville was temporarily the county seat of Wayne in 1801, when Wayne and Pike were one.

Men are cutting trees in the woods. They are going to build a tramway from Wilsonville to the Eddy, to run the logs out, and to convey material for the dam up the same road. Thirty men are working in the woods. They are also erecting a saw mill, the engine bed of which is already finished.

The talk then drifted to a stabbing affray among the Squirt Hillers, where a man was cut in the back of his head and right between the shoulders with an axe; when the men trade wives as they would horses.

To get local color for his story the reporter footed it out to Paupack Falls. It was only a mile—but then miles in the country are so long compared to city miles. He stopped at several farmhouses along the way to inquire how much farther on the Falls were.

"It's a right smart piece." "It's only a short ways." "We don't think anything of walking up there in ten minutes," were some of the replies he got to his questions. [N. B. He didn't meet a single dog on his tramp.]

Arriving finally at the scene of the proposed dam, he gazed in awe-struck wonder at the mighty Falls of the Paupack; viewed the rainbow over the crest; mid deep he imagined he saw the ghostly form of an Indian maiden, with uplifted finger as if to say, "Paleface beware! Cross this yawning abyss, white man never safely passed. Begone!"

Mute mementoes of former attempts to harness the Falls were to be seen in stone-walls rapidly falling into decay. Two or three houses dotted the steep sides of the stream. Not a human being was in sight. The sun began to sink below the horizon. A ghastly feeling was in the air. Admonished by the sight of a woodsman returning homeward from his day's work, empty dinner pail in hand, the reporter wearily turned his way Hawleyward.

A passing rig driven by a stalwart farmer boy offered him a chance for a ride. He accepted it with alacrity.

FARM BOY'S STORY.

"Yes, we sold our 50-acre farm to the company and got a good price for it," was the information vouchsafed by the young man, who was driving to Hawley to take his sister, who worked in the silk mill, home from her day's work. His folks would be obliged to move to Hawley soon. He had been offered work by the company, but since he had to drive his sister to work in the morning, and go after her in the evening, he was bemoaning his fate at not being able to accept the chance.

As the clock struck 6, the reporter landed in Hawley, tired and hungry, and with only 29 minutes to get on the outside of a good supper, and catch the Erie train, for wonder of wonders, it was on time! In his mind's eye he could see Hawley grow into a thriving, bustling municipality with 100,000 inhabitants.

The relentless conductor awoke him from his day dreams with the raucous cry:

"All out for Honesdale!"
