Caucuses are being held in different parts of the county, but they will in no way affect the nomination of candidates. Every candidate running for office must file his nomination paper before September 9. It is just and proper that prospective nominees for office get together and see how matters stand. For instance John Jones might be a candidate for supervisor from the southern end of a township. He could look after the roads in that section. John Smith, his next door neighbor might be another candidate and had not been for holding a caucus the voters would not have known that the northern section was not represented. Any number of petitions can be taken out, circulated and fled before September 9, even after a caucus has been held. The caucus, or "gentlemen's meeting" as it is sometimes called, should be encouraged and by holding them candidates can better see how the different important offices of his district are distributed.
