looked as though it might have been a caboose turned into a box. The thing most noticeable about it was a door at one end. Why I hadn't noticed this before I don't know unless it was because the end was only about two feet from the end of another car.

I saw that there was or had been a lock on the door. There wasn't any knob, but a nail had been put through the screw hole of the steel piece on which the knob had been fixed. I climbed up on the coupling and tried to turn the nnil to open the door. I didn't succeed. I listened, but everything was still. But I didn't forget that giggle, and pretty soon I knocked. In a few moments I heard whispers within. Then all of a sudden the door was pulled open, and there stood a boy and a girl.

Besides these, I got a view of the car. There was a carpet on it, the worse for wear: in one corner was a mattress with bedclothing; in the center was a pine table, and at one side was a cook stove. And I noticed that the stovepipe was run down instead of up or horizontal and passed through a hole in the floor."

"Please don't give us away," said the girl, going for me with a pair of blue eyes not many could resist. "You'd better let me come in," I answered. "If the conductor or any of the train hands should come along there'd be no need of giving you away.' I went inside and shut the door after me. Then I asked, "Will you be good enough to tell me what this means?" "We're a bride and groom," said the young feller, who couldn't have been over seventeen years old.
