LIFT WAR CLOUDS.

British Premier Claims the Friendship of Germany.

COMMONS CHEERS SPEECH.

Mr. Asquith Explains That Lord Haldane's Visit to Berlin was to Come to an Agreement Regarding Their Mutual Acts—Admits Nearness of War Last Summer.

London, Feb. 15.—The expected announcement in regard to the visit of Lord Haldane, the British war secretary, to Berlin, where he conferred with the German emperor, was made in the house of commons by Herbert Henry Asquith, the premier. Mr. Asquith's statement is taken as meaning that Great Britain and Germany have at last come to an agreement in regard to their mutual actions. Mr. Asquith's important announcement was greeted with hearty cheers.
 The premier, answering a question, admitted that the relations between Germany and Great Britain have recently been clouded over by serious events, but he stigmatized as a pure invention the story that the British fleet last summer was ready to attack Germany. This story was circulated during the crisis in the negotiations over Morocco, when war between Germany and France, England's ally, seemed likely. The story gained a wide circulation, and Mr. Asquith's statement is practically the only official contradiction of it.
 It is rumored that this is the last official act of Lord Haldane as secretary of war and that his assistant, Colonel John Bernard Seely, will soon succeed him.
 Continuing, the premier declared that the anticipations in regard to the results of Lord Haldane's visit to Berlin and an improvement in the friendly relations between Great Britain and Germany were completely realized. Lord Haldane, he said, freely and frankly conversed with a wide area of German officialdom, and there was an unmistakable evidence of a sincere and resolute desire on both sides for a better footing for their relations, but at the same time without impairing their special relationships which each bore to other powers.
 "Both countries are now engaged with a careful survey of the practical possibilities," was the concluding sentence of the premier's statement. As he repeated himself on the bench cheers broke out from all parts of the house. The significance of the premier's words were instantly realized, and the unanimous approval which was given them on the spur of the moment showed that the sentiment in the house of commons for better relations between Germany and England is almost unanimous.

WANT INDEPENDENCE.

Porto Rican Papers Quote Senator Root as Opposing Citizenship.
 New York, Feb. 15.—Porto Rican papers just arrived here tell of a statement made by Senator Root of New York in which he put his foot down on the idea of granting the Porto Ricans American citizenship and expressed himself in favor of granting them independence under an American protectorate.
 Senator Root expressed his views to Roberto Todd, mayor of San Juan and member of the national Republican committee, when the latter was in Washington to attend the gathering of that body. Todd wanted some definite expression from him on the subject, and he got it.
 Gonzalo O'Neill and D. Collazio, president and secretary of the Porto Rican alliance, are joyous over this reputed stand of Mr. Root. They are tired, they say, of just hoping for American citizenship for their fellow people. Ninety-five per cent of the Porto Ricans were in favor of independence, they say.
