WHAT ADVERTISING DOES.

Many persons have the idea that advertising only pays soap manufacturers, breakfast food makers and department stores, says the Harrisburg Telegraph. "It is a good thing," they say admiringly—evidently—but they seem unable to grasp the fact that it would be a great thing for THEM. Hence the more or less restricted character of advertising to-day. The "little fellow" hesitates to "butt in" on the big fellow's game, unmindful of the fact that the big fellow was a little fellow once, and that he grew big through recognizing and utilizing the strength of advertising. John Wanamaker, for example, after delivering his first dry goods order in a wheelbarrow, went to the Philadelphia newspaper offices and spent the entire amount—a little over $100—in advertising. He frankly attributes his great success to that $100, and to the aggressive advertising policy which he then adopted and has since adhered to without variation. There is no business or profession no occupation requiring public support, assistance for co-operation in which advertising is not valuable. Not long ago a local church, which tried the experiment of announcing its attractions in a paid advertisement inserted in the Telegraph, found that the crowds attracted by that advertisement were too great to get into the building. Still more recent was the case of old Mrs. Stott, whose son was hanged in the county jail at Harrisburg last week. She didn't have money enough to pay her fare from Syracuse to Harrisburg for a last visit to the wayward boy, and she was in an agony of suspense because there seemed to be nothing but the potter's field for him after the execution. The newspapers of Syracuse and the Telegraph in Harrisburg laid the facts before the public. They did not make an appeal for funds, but nearly $1,000 was sent in to them for the penniless woman. To be sure, that was not advertising in one sense of the word, but in another it was. It was talking to a whole lot of people at once, instead of wasting your breath and time on one. Some men can't talk convincingly and some men can't advertise convincingly, but that is no argument against either talking or advertising. The possibilities of good advertising are no more limited or restricted in their fields than the possibilities of good talking.

Short Waterway Cuts 1,000 Miles.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Mayors of Red River Valley cities in Minnesota, North Dakota and Manitoba held a conference in this city last week. The result was the organization of the Red River to the Hudson Bay Navigation association, the purpose being to promote the movement looking to the establishment of a through waterway from the plains of the Northwest to Liverpool. Mayor R. D. Waugh, of Winnipeg, was the principal speaker at the conference. He declared that the time is not far distant when the Great Northern Railway would build a line from Winnipeg to Fort Nelson that would furnish a direct link between the American Northwest and England, being 1,000 miles shorter than the present route through the Great Lakes and by way of New York. It was decided to hold a navigation congress at Winnipeg in June.

Three Stars to Play Picture Films

New York.—Vaudeville, then the "movies." Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, Sir Herbert Tree and Mme. Rejane, after listening to the lure of the "two a day," have agreed that they will also lend themselves as attractions for the moving pictures. It was announced that contracts for the appearance of the three noted stars, before picture machines, have been signed according to cables received. "The Chorus Lady" will be the attraction at the Lyric on Monday, March 18.

LONG CAREER OF ANNIE YEAMANS

Actress Who Died Recently Had Been 66 Years on Stage.

HAD PART IN MANY OLD SHOWS

Started as a Circus Performer in Australia—Was With Harrigan and Hart For Twenty Years—In Augustin Daly's Companies.

Mrs. Annie Yeamans, the actress, who died recently at the age of seventy-six, outlived her three contemporaries, "Aunt" Louisa Eldridge, Mrs. John Drew and Mrs. Gilbert, and was the last of the women of her generation on the American stage. Mrs. Annie Yeamans was born on the Isle of Man Nov. 19, 1835. Her maiden name was Annie Griffiths. Her father, himself for many years connected with the theatrical business in one way and another, moved to Australia when his daughter was a small child, and at the age of ten she made her first public appearance as Little Julia in "A Father's Daughter." The child continued playing small parts and doing chorus and ballet work with her father's organization. The company presented all sorts of entertainments from farce to opera. "Ernanani," "The Bohemian Girl" and "Marrina" were among the operas which the company offered and in which Little Annie Griffiths appeared, dancing and singing in the chorus. Rowe's circus, an American organization, was playing in Australia a bit later, and the girl was apprenticed to this circus. Here she learned to ride and to jump through paper hoops and to do the rest of the things expected of equestriennes. When she was eighteen years old she married Edward Yeamans, a clown with the circus. She came to America in 1865. After that Mrs. Yeamans and her husband appeared in circus in Java and Singapore and lived for a year in Hongkong. In 1865 they came to America, first appearing in California, then touring the middle west and some two years later reached New York. Mrs. Yeamans' first appearance in New York was as a page in "Cendrillon," a spectacle which Mark Smith and Lewis Baker were running in opposition to "The Black Crook." She next was seen in "The Ticket of Leave Man," in which, as she herself expressed it a few years ago, she "played about every part from Sam Willoughby to the old grandmother." "Griffith Gaunt" was produced by Augustin Daly at the New York theater not long afterward, and she engaged Mrs. Yeamans to do a jig in the fair scene. After that she returned to the circus, but her husband died about a year after they had reached New York, and Mrs. Yeamans left circus life for good. After her husband's death Mrs. Yeamans spent two years with Mrs. F. B. Conway's stock company in Brooklyn. Her next engagement was with G. L. Fox's "Humpty Dumpty," in which her daughter Jennie also appeared. Augustin Daly then secured her for his company playing "Round the Clock" at the Grand Opera House, New York.

Fifteen hours' battling with a dozen or more snakes forty feet below ground in an abandoned well was the racking experience of Charles Welbourne, a cowboy, residing in Valverde county, Tex. Eight dead snakes, measuring in length from two to four feet, were taken out.

Sunday School Teachers Confer.

Pennsylvania Sunday school executives and field workers meeting in mid-winter conference at Harrisburg last week touched on the color question and for more than an hour opinions of the importance of the work being done by colored men and women were expressed. More than half of the negro element in the state is either enlisted in the Sunday school movement with the whites or separately organized. The advisability of their support in the general movement was laid aside for further consideration. Some very encouraging reports of the negro organization in this State were submitted.
