ABOUT ADVERTISING.

The best and most successful firms in business recognize that the sub-ject of advertising is an essential feature and must be considered with the other expense incident to the marketing of their goods. We can safely say that no business enter-prise ever was successful for any length of time without advertising in some manner.

Even in small towns you can look about you and pick out the adver-tising merchants from the one who falls to make public the fact that he has wares for sale, either from prejudice or shot-sightedness.

Piled away upon shelves, in lofts, and in warehouses in Honesdale are millions of dollars' worth of good goods waiting to be sold and they would be sold if the proper party was behind the enterprise to make them sell. The buying public are not mind readers; they do not know that you are anxious to turn your stock and get dead investment moving. It is not necessary to squander money without reason to advertise; there is such a thing as injudicious advertising as well as injudicious buying, but think well of the most effective way in which to place your goods before the people and carry forward an advertising campaign. It will do little good to burst out with a flare head, like a skyrocket and fall back to oblivion; to condemn the practice because crowds did not rush to your door. It is constantly keep-ing at it that wins out. As your business increases, increase proportionately your advertising allowance and your business will grow cor-respondingly. This does not mean that advertising alone will mend a business made sick by mismanage-ment or neglect to other necessary details, but two business firms of equal comparison, starting their career under the same circumstances, one doing judicious advertising and the other doing none, will soon show to the observer and customer, which has the brisk trade in new goods ever revolving, while the other will lapse into a state of self-satisfied quietude, content to wait upon the old friends who like to do business there because no one ever crowds them, and the proprietor can be found sitting inside the door waiting for their coming.

TO BREED WILD HOGS.

An Experiment to be Tried in the Hills of Pennsylvania.

The Pennsylvania hills are about to contribute another factor in the food supply of the country. Chestnut orcharding and apple have proven a success, now the business of raising hogs on a larger scale, using the wild lands as a range, is to begin, says a corres-pondent of the Philadelphia Record, at Jamison City. Henry W. Miller, who for many years has engaged in the breeding of cattle on the wild land ranges belonging to Col. Bruce Ricketts will this summer, in con-nection with his cattle business, have charge of a drove of 50 hogs. This is but a starter, for it is expected that within three years the number of hogs kept on the range will num-ber several hundred.

Miller has made a study of the conditions, the food to be obtained and the likelihood of the pigs being able to pick up practically their en-tire living, up to the time when the real fattening for killing would have to be attended to.

The entire drove of hogs to start with are to be Berkshires. It is cal-and gether; indeed, the one great trouble which Mr. Miller sees in the business is the likelihood of the hogs revolving shart last Friday. Only in a single season some hogs when He ton become wild and ferocious,
