ACTUAL hostilities in the present Balkan war began on Oct. 5 with a clash between Turkish troops and Montenegrin irregulars. Until then there had been an exchange of diplomatic notes and ultimatums between the Ottoman empire and the smaller states to the north regarding reforms in the administration of Macedonia, where the Christian inhabitants were complaining bitterly of treatment at the hands of the Moslems. The powers presented notes to the Ottoman states in an effort to preserve peace, but Montenegro, the smallest of Balkan states, spoiled all the plans by a declaration of war against Turkey on Oct. 8. The other Christian states deliberately kept the question longer than Montenegro, while the Montenegrins sent their armies against the Turks, including the sanjak of Novi Basar, in which Austria's interest is so strong. The fighting itself into a commanding position about Tarakasch, overlooking Scutari. A third army of the northern mountaineers invested and captured Tusi, which was between this army and Scutari. On Oct. 17, with the Montenegrin army gaining daily in its almost continuous fighting, the other Balkan states came into the conflict, Serbia and Greece declaring war on Turkey. The Bulgarians immediately set out for Adrianople, the Turkish fortified city, which protects Constantinople from attacks from the north. They won Mustapha Pasha, regarded as the door to Adrianople, on Oct. 19. The Serbians moved toward Uskub, which holds the key to Saloniki. After two days of hard fighting the Bulgarians captured Kirk Kilise, the most important point in their attack on Adrianople, at the point of the bayonet. Kirk Kilise is about thirty-five miles from Adrianople. Koumanovo then fell into the hands of the Serbians. Koumanovo is one of the strong outposts of Uskub. By the night of Oct. 26 Uskub had fallen to the Serbians, Scutari had been taken by the Montenegrins, and the Bulgarians were shelling Adrianople. The next reports told of the Bulgarians taking Baba Esk, twenty-five miles southeast of Adrianople and on the road to Constantinople. While part of the Bulgarian army remained to invest Adrianople, the remainder had simply skirted the town and started on for the capital. Dispatches of Oct. 31 told of the capture by the Bulgarians of Lule Burgas, commanding the Orient railway, at the left of the Turkish position in defense of Constantinople. From Lule Burgas the victorious Bulgarians advanced against Constantinople itself. A conservative estimate of the killed, permanently maimed and deaths from disease in the five armies since the war began is 50,000. The grand total cost of the war so far has been in the neighborhood of $150,000,000.

GIBSON FIGHTS WITH COUNSEL

His insistence on picking jury may cause one lawyer to withdraw. Goshen, N. Y., Nov. 19.—A serious clash between Burton W. Gibson, the lawyer accused of murdering his client, Mrs. Rose Menschik Szabo, for her $10,000 estate, and his counsel as to who shall dominate in matters causing difference of opinion has resulted from the first day of the trial spent in selecting a jury. Robert H. Elder says that five of the jurors were selected against his better judgment by Gibson because when it comes down to a matter of a verdict of guilty the jurors are the ones to "hand out the dope" and Gibson is the one to suffer. Charles Goldizer, one of Gibson's lawyers, says Gibson has "either a fool for a client or a fool for a lawyer, as you like to look at it," and intimates that circumstances might arise which would cause his withdrawal. As for Gibson, he gleefully said as he sat on the cot in his cell, his wife by his side: "I've had my way the first day in the selection of the jury. I am satisfied. We have a fine body of men." Gibson declared that his counsel was certain that it would not be necessary for him to take the stand. "If I think it advisable," he added, "I shall certainly go on." Gibson admitted dissenting with his counsel, saying: "We were scrapping all day. Didn't you hear us?" Mr. Elder said that five men on the jury were chosen by Gibson. Later he said there was no juror accepted whom he did not approve of. At one point during the examination Elder told Gibson to "keep still" so loudly that he was heard by lawyers for the prosecution. Charles Goldizer examined only one witness during yesterday. When asked why this was, he declared that he was not a lawyer to stand dictation by a client as to who should go on the jury, and in this connection he revised the adage about a man having a fool for a client when he acts as his own lawyer.

ASTOR GLAD TO BE ON JURY.

Appreciates honor of being on third panel as father did. New York, Nov. 19.—Vincent Astor, who was notified on his twenty-first birthday that he had been named by Sheriff Harburger to fill the vacancy on the third panel of the sheriff's jury occasioned by the death of his father, sent the following letter to the sheriff in reply: "It is with pleasure that I have received your notification of my appointment to the third panel, sheriff's jury. My father always highly appreciated the honor of being a member of such a body, and I am glad of the opportunity of filling the place which he held."
