A LEGEND OF THE MISTLETOE BOUGH

It was an old legend now, a hundred years old at least. Generations had come and gone, and the weird of Barham Hall had never once given a sign of coming into fulfillment, so what need was there for fear? It was true that mistletoe was at last growing on the boughs of the old Hawthorn in the Yote sward. But it was Christmas eve, and the bells of Barham church were ringing Christmas chimes.

More than 100 years ago Roger Lyndale had done that which perhaps was not an honorable thing. Roger had wooed a farmer's daughter, but had not married her, and she had died at his gates. Across the grass levels, now covered with snow, the old farmhouse could still be seen, mute with its history.

Not a soul of Druscilla Ives' time was alive in the old homestead. Strangers were under its roof paying tribute to Barham Hall, as Druscilla's father had done.

But the descendants of Roger Lyndale were still at the hall, with a link between them and the story of the old Yote farm.

For, strangely enough, Druscilla had died on Christmas eve, and the legend of Barham Hall had come from her lips:

When mistletoe grows on the old Yote thorn No child to a Lyndale will e'er be born.

So she had prophesied, and the prediction meant that when the white berry could be plucked from the old Hawthorn standing alone on the green sweep of the Yote sward of Barham park the race of Lyndale would become extinct.

And now at last mistletoe was growing on the old thorn!

Yet there were laughter and gaiety in the hall. The great open fireplace in the wainscot room was heaped up with glowing, crackling Yule logs, and all was a bright sparkle of merriment and good cheer.

Yet there was some little awe after all, although it had been cast off like a cloak thrown into a corner, for the legend at its worst was not without qualification. It had a second couplet, which ran:

But he that would nobly this curse undo Must lowly maid wed and to her be true.

When that saving grace was attached to the legend and when the weird had been worn out by the passing of a century what was there to fear?

"Good gracious! What is that?" exclaimed Lady Lyndale suddenly. "Not the choir again surely! They've been and gone."

A voice was singing: "When mistletoe grows on the old Yote thorn No child to a Lyndale will e'er be born. But he that would nobly this curse undo Must lowly maid wed and to her be true."

It was the weird, and it was being sung by a woman's voice to the refrain of "The Mistletoe Bough."

What could it mean? "It must be somebody," said Roland Lyndale when it became certain that the voice had finished. "I'll see who it is."

With the words he crossed the room, drew aside the curtains of one of the windows and looked out upon the snow.

"It's strange," murmured Roland, turning to his father, who still sat beside the hearth. "There's no one here, sir."

"No," replied Sir Geoffrey; "I did not expect there would be. It was some impertinent person from the village, that is evident."

"Leo and Dorothy should be almost here now," said Lady Lyndale presently. "I wonder whether it is the snow that's made them late."

The butler appeared and handed Lyndale a telegram. "Is it bad news, Geoffrey?" asked Lady Lyndale.

"Yes, Millicent," he replied in a dry tone. "Leo has been taken ill with pneumonia, a fearful thing at any time, and he's not strong. You can see," he added, handing the message to his wife. "Dorothy says she'll wire at once if it becomes critical."

The children still laughed and played, but the elders became grave. "Poor old Lionel! I hope he will pull through it," Lyndale murmured in an uneasy voice.

light, and Roland laid his hand gently on the woman's shoulder. Then she moved, rose to her feet and turned up to him vague eyes and a face so beautiful that he started. And the start set his strange trembling going afresh. But this time there was pity in the tremor, for he saw that the beautiful face was as white as death, sad, weary worn and so fragile that his instinctive thought of her was as of a white lily cast out in the snow.

"My dear young lady," Roland asked, wondering, "whatever brings you here like this? For you are off the road, and I see you are a stranger."

"My name," she answered faintly, "is Phyllis Egerton. My mother was the great-great-granddaughter of Druscilla Ives."

For a moment Roland was dumb. "Druscilla Ives!" he said presently. "Yes," she replied again. "We have always kept the legend of her fate and her prophecy against Barham Hall in our family. And when I was quite a little thing I promised myself that some day, one Christmas eve, I would come and see Yote farm, where she lived, and the tree and perhaps the prophecy outside the hall where she should have lived."

Roland felt strangely uncomfortable and yet gently pitiful. It was curious that after the long passing of a century he should be the first to come into contact with a descendant of the faithful Ives.

"But why?" he asked again, impressed by the hand of fate in it all. "I don't know," she returned weakly, her head leaning against the trunk of the tree, "unless it was because I felt I must. Druscilla died on Christmas eve. I wondered where she might have been buried under the snow as I passed the church. I looked at the farm first. Then I went up to the house and sang, and then I came here. But I did not think I should see the mistletoe."

"But, my dear young lady, what will you do?" Roland asked her, pained by her helplessness and by the mystery. "And, oh," she went on brokenly, "when I came here I almost wished I could die too! I am the last of the race from Amos Ives, with nothing left to live for—nothing! My father I lost eighteen months ago, and my mother died in June. So I've nothing. Six months I've struggled to live."

As she spoke she slipped from the trunk of the thorn and would have fallen backward in the snow, but with a quick step Roland caught and supported her with his arm round her waist.

As she lay against him rather than stood, with her face fallen on his shoulder, Roland felt her hands. They were icy cold.

"Poor girl," he said, feeling her misery in himself, "you must not stay here! I must take you to the hall."

Then quickly he lifted her in his arms and carried her into the hall, the first of the race of Ives, man or woman, to pass its threshold for a hundred years.

Sir Geoffrey was sitting in the wainscot room alone when Roland entered with his burden, for the ladies and the children had gone to the nursery, and he looked up blankly. "Father, the singer," Roland said gravely, "the last of the race of Druscilla Ives. I found her under the tree, a wanderer and friendless. You yourself can see how she is."

"Fetch your mother, and I'll ring for Mrs. Cox and Parkins," said Sir Geoffrey huskily.

Phyllis Egerton was carried to the bedroom in which a hundred years ago Roger Lyndale had slept, and a kindly Christmas was made for her, but four days passed before she could leave the chamber.

On New Year's day wondering eyes watched Phyllis and Roland going up through the village to old Barham church.

Phyllis and Roland went to a weather-crumbled gravestone which, tradition said, marked the grave in which Druscilla Ives had been buried, and, with hands clasped across the now flat grass, they kissed.

"A happy New Year, my lady. A happy New Year, sir," the village folks greeted as Phyllis and Roland returned to the hall.

It was the happiest year that Roland had known, and as he and Phyllis passed up the drive they looked and smiled at the thorn and the mistletoe bough.

"FATHER, THE SINGER," ROLAND SAID.
