PREDICTS GENERATION OF POWER FROM TIDES.

British Engineer Says the Moon Soon Will Be Working For Us.

The scientist's age long dream of harnessing the tides of the ocean and making them work for us soon will be realized, says C. A. Battiscombe, an eminent English engineer. Mr. Battiscombe says:

"After a close study of the subject for years I am of the opinion that the use of the tides for power of all sorts may now be placed on a strictly commercial basis by the board of trade An electrical unit might be obtained by ! this means at the cost of only about one-eighth of a penny (quarter of a cent), including everything, as compared with from three and a half pence to twopence (7 to 4 cents) under the other power systems now in use.

"The tidal proposal is not so revolutionary after all. I wonder how many people realize the use to which this tidal power is put every day of the year in propelling ships and in the case of tidal basins in raising vessels of enormous tonnage.

"The installation would not be complicated and would follow the lines of three practical patents, taken out by Germans, for combined reservoirs and supply chambers. The main difficulty today turns on the question of embankment walls-whether they can be built with sufficient economy to make such installations a practical success. The use of a ferro-concrete skin on the inner part, which is formed of cheaper materials, solves this difficulty, in my opinion."

He quickly went with eager feet. And, seeking in a corner there, He lifted forth with tender care
